Statement before the United States House of Representatives
Committee on Financial Services
Subcommittee on Capital Markets, Securities, and Investment
On Ensuring Effectiveness, Fairness, and Transparency in Securities Law Enforcement

Statement of Bradley J. Bondi

June 13, 2018

The views expressed in this testimony are those of the author alone and do not necessarily represent those of any other individual or organization.

STATEMENT OF BRADLEY J. BONDI
BEFORE THE UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
COMMITTEE ON FINANCIAL SERVICES
SUBCOMMITTEE ON CAPITAL MARKETS, SECURITIES, AND INVESTMENT
HEARING ON "ENSURING EFFECTIVENESS, FAIRNESS, AND TRANSPARENCY IN SECURITIES LAW ENFORCEMENT"

JUNE 13, 2018

Chairman Huizenga, Ranking Member Maloney, and Distinguished Members. My name is Bradley J. Bondi. I am pleased to appear before you today to share my views in this hearing on "Ensuring Effectiveness, Fairness, and Transparency in Securities Law Enforcement," and, in particular, my views on H.R. 2128 ("Due Process Restoration Act of 2017") and H.R. 5037 ("Securities Fraud Act of 2018").

BACKGROUND

I am a practicing attorney and a partner with the law firm Cahill Gordon & Reindel LLP, where I lead my firm's securities enforcement and regulatory practices. I am admitted to the bars of New York, Washington, D.C., and Florida. Much of my law practice is devoted to representing public companies and financial institutions in securities enforcement matters before the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC").

I previously served in senior positions in government including as counsel to SEC Commissioner Paul Atkins and then to SEC Commissioner Troy Paredes. While at the SEC, I was detailed to the Financial Crisis Inquiry Commission where I served as deputy general counsel and led one of the three investigative teams examining the causes of the financial crisis. More recently, I served in a leadership role on President Trump's transition team, advising on financial services matters and leading the landing team to the Export-Import Bank of the United States.

In addition to my law practice, I serve as an adjunct law professor at Georgetown University Law Center and George Mason University Antonin Scalia Law School where I teach courses on securities law and the SEC. I am also a senior fellow with the Center for Financial Stability, a nonprofit, nonpartisan, and independent think tank focusing on financial markets for the benefit of investors, officials, and the public. My writing and scholarship focuses on SEC enforcement matters.

I have appended to my written testimony a relevant article that I authored last year entitled, "Improving the SEC's Enforcement Program: A Ten-Point Blueprint for Reform" and a still-relevant article I co-authored 10 years ago with then-Commissioner Paul Atkins entitled, "Evaluating the Mission: A Critical Review of the History and Evolution of the SEC Enforcement Program," which was published by the Fordham Journal of Corporate and Financial Law.

Although I am affiliated with several organizations, I am testifying today in my individual capacity, and my views are my own. My views do not necessarily reflect those of my law firm or its clients.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT REGARDING THE SEC

The SEC is an agency that I greatly respect and admire. In my years serving at the Commission and in private practice, I have worked with many intelligent, dedicated, and hard-working professionals at the SEC. My observation is that the SEC as a whole overwhelmingly has sought to abide by its mandate and for the most part has been successful in doing so. Nevertheless, there is always room for improvement, and I am here today to discuss a few areas where I think the SEC may have strayed from its mission and to offer suggestions on how to realign the agency with its mission.

THE SEC'S THREE-PRONG MISSION IN THE CONTEXT OF ENFORCEMENT

The SEC's mission is composed of three objectives: "to protect investors; maintain fair, orderly, and efficient markets; and facilitate capital formation."[1] In the area of enforcement, the SEC has focused historically on the investor-protection prong of the mission, with a particular focus on the retail investor. A robust enforcement regime to defend the markets against fraud is essential to encouraging capital formation. Enforcement almost always involves a balancing of competing interests both at a case-specific level and at a policy level. A decision aimed at protecting one group of investors could have a detrimental impact on a different group of investors. Similarly, a decision aimed at protecting investors could harm market efficiency or chill capital formation. The balancing of conflicting interests must be guided by the principles of predictability, transparency, and the rule of law.

The SEC's approach to issuer penalties and disgorgement is an area that could threaten the balance of the SEC's three-part mission. In recent years, the SEC has focused on bringing large numbers of enforcement cases and obtaining large financial settlements. At the end of its 2016 fiscal year, the SEC issued a press release announcing that the 868 enforcement actions it filed in 2016 were a "new single year high."[2] It also announced that it had obtained approximately $4 billion in disgorgement and penalties that year. This was the third year in a row that the SEC announced a record number of enforcement actions.[3]

---

[1] See Securities and Exchange Commission Agency Financial Report: Fiscal Year 2017 at 4 (Nov. 13, 2017), available at https://www.sec.gov/files/sec-2017-agency-financial-report.pdf.

[2] See Press Release, SEC, SEC Announces Enforcement Results for FY 2016 (Oct. 11, 2016), Release No. 2016-212, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/pressrelease/2016-212.html.

[3] See Press Release, SEC, SEC's FY 2014 Enforcement Actions Span Securities Industry and Include First-Ever Cases (Oct. 16, 2014), Release No. 2014-230, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/press-release/2014-230 ("In the fiscal year that ended in September, the SEC filed a record 755 enforcement actions . . . ."); Press Release, SEC, SEC Announces Enforcement Results for FY 2015 (Oct. 22, 2015), Release No. 2015-245, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/pressrelease/2015-245.html ("In the fiscal year that ended in September, the SEC filed 807 enforcement actions . . . .").

The number of enforcement actions and the amount of disgorgement and penalties purportedly demonstrate the success of the SEC's enforcement program. But if the aim of the program is to protect investors and deter wrongdoing, then the high numbers of enforcement actions and penalties are, at best, a poor way to measure that protection and deterrence. At worst, record numbers are an indication that securities law violations are increasing in number and severity. After all, few would consider a local police force successful in deterring crime if it announced record numbers of arrests year after year.

In addition, the SEC's focus on achieving record numbers could have the practical effect of disproportionately allocating scarce resources towards pursuing a large volume of minor or unintentional violations involving large companies (and thus leading to large penalty figures) at the expense of pursuing fewer but more complicated cases involving intentional wrongdoing such as Ponzi schemes, boiler rooms, and bucket shops, which have a disproportionately negative impact on retail investors. An overemphasis on enforcement statistics also may lead the SEC to develop and pursue theories of liability that exceed the bounds of the SEC's congressionally-authorized enforcement power.[4]

An emphasis on obtaining large penalties against corporations creates incentives that may be misaligned with the core mission of the SEC to protect investors, namely the innocent shareholders who must bear the cost of a corporate monetary penalty. I commend SEC Chairman Jay Clayton and his Enforcement Directors for their de-emphasis of statistics and for their work to better align the Division of Enforcement with the SEC's mission. I believe the SEC is heading in the right direction and I hope my constructive comments today will assist with that effort.

EVALUATING THE STANDARDS FOR MONETARY PENALTIES AND DISGORGEMENT

A review of the history of SEC corporate penalties is necessary to evaluate whether the agency's penalty scheme is aligned with the SEC's mission. The Remedies Act of 1990 enabled the SEC to seek monetary penalties against public companies. At the time, the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs cautioned that the costs of monetary penalties might be passed on to shareholders, and the Committee expected that the SEC would seek a monetary penalty only when the securities law violation had resulted in an improper benefit to shareholders.[5] In cases in which shareholders are the principal victims of the violations, the

---

[4] This so-called "regulation by enforcement" is contrary to the SEC's rulemaking authority and violates fundamental principles of due process that require regulatory agencies to provide a notice and comment period for new or modified rules. See Bradley J. Bondi, Dangerous Liaisons: Collective Scienter in SEC Enforcement Actions, 6 N.Y.U. J. L. & Bus. 1, 16 n.64 (2009) (quoting then-Commissioner Paul Atkins, who said, "[i]f we are to enforce the rule of law, we must follow the rule of law in our approach"); see also Theodore W. Urban, SEC Administrative Proceeding File No. 3-13655, Initial Decision Release No. 402 (Sept. 8, 2010), dismissed by Exchange Act Release No. 66359 (Jan. 26, 2012).

[5] See S. Rep. No. 101-337, at 17 (1990).

Committee expected that the SEC, when appropriate, would seek penalties from the individual offenders acting for a corporate issuer.

In view of Congress's concern for shareholders, for the first 12 years after the passage of the Remedies Act, the SEC imposed issuer penalties sparingly. But, in April 2002, the SEC brought a case against Xerox Corporation that marked a sea change in the SEC's approach to seeking penalties. The SEC imposed an unprecedented $10 million penalty on Xerox for financial fraud, a penalty three times larger than any previous amount for a similar case.[6] Since the Xerox case, the SEC has levied many civil penalties of $10 million or more. In 2003, the year after the Xerox case, the total amount of monetary penalties (excluding disgorgement) imposed by the SEC on companies increased to approximately $1.1 billion from approximately $101 million in the prior year.[7] Since then, penalties against corporations have continued to climb. The high-water mark to-date is a $550 million penalty that the SEC obtained in a settlement with an investment bank in July 2010.[8]

In January 2006, a unanimous Commission issued the Statement of the Securities and Exchange Commission Concerning Financial Penalties, often known simply as the SEC's "Penalty Statement."[9] The stated purpose of the Penalty Statement was to provide the maximum possible degree of clarity, consistency, and predictability in explaining how the SEC exercises its corporate penalty authority. In the Penalty Statement, the SEC identified two principal considerations for determining whether a monetary penalty against a company is appropriate: (1) the presence or absence of a direct benefit to the company as a result of the securities law violation and (2) the degree to which the penalty will recompense or further harm the injured shareholders. After the Penalty Statement, annual aggregate monetary penalty amounts dropped significantly. In 2008, for example, the SEC imposed approximately $256 million in monetary penalties,[10] down from approximately $1.2 billion and $1.5 billion in 2004 and 2005, respectively.[11]

---

[6] See Press Release, SEC, Xerox Settles SEC Enforcement Action Charging Company With Fraud (Apr. 11, 2002), Release No. 2002-52, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/headlines/xeroxsettles.htm; see also James Bandler and Mark Maremont, Xerox Will Pay $10 Million Penalty to Settle SEC Accounting Charges, Wall St. J. (Apr. 2, 2002), available at https://www.wsj.com/articles/SB1017682255642049000.

[7] See SEC 2002 Annual Report, at 1 (Jan. 1, 2002,) available at https://www.sec.gov/pdf/annrep02/ar02full.pdf ("Civil penalties ordered in SEC proceedings totaled approximately $101 million."); SEC 2003 Annual Report, at 15 (Jan. 1, 2003), available at https://www.sec.gov/pdf/annrep03/ar03full.pdf ("Obtained orders in SEC judicial and administrative proceedings requiring securities violators . . . to pay penalties of approximately $1.1 billion.").

[8] See Press Release, SEC, Goldman Sachs to Pay Record $550 Million to Settle SEC Charges Related to Subprime Mortgage CDO, Release No. 2010-123, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/press/2010/2010-123.htm. Interestingly, in that case there was no allegation of any harm to a retail investor.

[9] See Press Release, SEC, Statement of the Securities and Exchange Commission Concerning Financial Penalties (Jan. 4, 2006), Release No. 2006-4, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/press/2006-4.htm.

[10] See Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2008, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2008.pdf.

[11] See United States Securities and Exchange Commission 2004 Enforcement and Market Data, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secpar04stats%2C0.pdf; Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2005, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2005%2C0.pdf.

In recent years, some commissioners have disavowed the Penalty Statement. In September 2013, the then-Chair of the SEC observed that the Penalty Statement is non-binding and, while recognizing that it sets forth useful considerations, said that each commissioner has discretion within his or her statutory authority to reach a conclusion on whether a penalty is appropriate and how high it should be.[12] A few weeks later, another SEC Commissioner agreed and commented that the Penalty Statement "constituted a fatally flawed approach to assessing the appropriateness of corporate penalties" because it focused on whether the company had benefited from the misconduct and shareholder harm instead of punishing misconduct and deterring future violations.[13] Since 2013, the average annual amount of monetary penalties (excluding disgorgement) imposed has been approximately $1.165 billion.[14] The disavowal of the Penalty Statement has created unpredictability regarding the criteria that the SEC considers when determining whether to impose a penalty.

The amount of a monetary penalty is also unpredictable because in recent years the SEC has not articulated criteria or metrics for calculating how much it will penalize a company. This unpredictability negatively impacts companies. For example, the inability to predict the size of a potential penalty hinders the market for mergers and acquisitions because potential bidders cannot accurately forecast regulatory exposure.

The current Commission appears to be taking a more measured approach to assessing monetary penalties. The aggregate amount of penalties in 2017 was $832 million, a decline of approximately 35% from the near-record $1.273 billion in penalties imposed in 2016.[15] I commend the Commission for this more measured approach, and I encourage the Commission to release a renewed penalty statement explaining the circumstances in which the SEC will seek a monetary penalty.

There also has been growing uncertainty over the SEC's treatment and approach to the equitable remedy of disgorgement. The SEC can seek to force defendants to disgorge ill-gotten gains. Courts have required the SEC to demonstrate a causal connection between the property to be

---

[12] Mary Jo White, Chair, SEC, Remarks before the Council of Institutional Investors Fall Conference: Deploying the Full Enforcement Arsenal (Sept. 26, 2013), available at http://www.sec.gov/News/Speech/Detail/Speech/1370539841202.

[13] Luis A. Aguilar, Commissioner, SEC, Remarks before the 20th Annual Securities Litigation and Regulatory Enforcement Seminar: A Stronger Enforcement Program to Enhance Investor Protection (Oct. 25, 2013), available at https://www.sec.gov/news/speech/2013-spch102513laa.

[14] The penalty amount was $1.167 billion in 2013, $1.378 billion in 2014, $1.175 billion in 2015, $1.273 billion in 2016, and $832 million in 2017. See Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2013, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2013.pdf; Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2014, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2014.pdf; Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2015, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2015.pdf; Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2016, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/2017-03/secstats2016.pdf; and SEC Division of Enforcement Annual Report: A Look Back at Fiscal Year 2017, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/enforcement-annual-report-2017.pdf.

[15] See Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2016, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/2017-03/secstats2016.pdf; and SEC Division of Enforcement Annual Report: A Look Back at Fiscal Year 2017, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/enforcement-annual-report-2017.pdf.

disgorged and the wrongdoing.[16] The remedy of disgorgement is used often in insider trading cases to recover the profits made by trading on material, nonpublic information. The remedy also is applied in areas where investors have been defrauded by fraudulent investment scams.

In other areas, however, the remedy of disgorgement has become untethered from the underlying offense, which creates unpredictability and the potential for harm to shareholders. For example, in cases involving payments to foreign government officials, disgorgement has been applied as a remedy for violating the books and records and internal controls provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.[17] But in cases in which the SEC has not charged any violation of the FCPA's anti-bribery provisions, the connection between the incorrect recording of a payment to a foreign official and any ill-gotten gain resulting from that payment is tenuous.[18] It is the bribe, not the misrecording of it, which caused the ill-gotten gain; so a violation of the recording provision should not provide a sufficient causal link for disgorgement. This tenuous approach and the imprecise "reasonable approximation" standard for determining the amount of disgorgement[19] creates the potential that a disgorgement sanction will not be commensurate with the amount of ill-gotten gains. Unfortunately, the SEC's approach to disgorgement often goes unchallenged and unreviewed by a court. As a result, the standard for obtaining disgorgement is less predictable.

This lack of transparency and predictability with respect to monetary penalties and disgorgement is contrary to the SEC's mission to maintain fair, orderly, and efficient markets and to facilitate capital formation. In July 1934, Joseph P. Kennedy, the first chairman of the SEC, stated there would be no concealed punishment for businesses subject to the SEC's jurisdiction.[20] In that spirit of transparency, the SEC should provide clear, principled guidance regarding when it will seek a penalty or disgorgement and how it will calculate the amount.

EXTENDING THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FOR DISGORGEMENT AND PENALTIES

One area of the securities laws in which there has been a welcome clarification is the statute of limitations applicable to cases in which the SEC seeks disgorgement and penalties. The Supreme Court's recent unanimous decision in Kokesh v. SEC held that the Commission's [16] See SEC v. First City Financial Corp., Ltd., 890 F.2d 1215, 1231 (D.C. Cir. 1989) ("Since disgorgement primarily serves to prevent unjust enrichment, the court may exercise its equitable power only over property causally related to the wrongdoing.").

---

[17] See 15 U.S.C. § 78m(b)(2)(A)-(B) (requiring public companies to make and keep accurate books, records, and accounts and to devise and maintain internal accounting controls).

[18] See also In re Rockwell Automation Inc., Admin. Proc. No. 3-14364 (May 3, 2011) (imposing $1.7 million in disgorgement in an FCPA case); SEC v. Chevron Corp., No. 07-cv-10299 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 20, 2007) (imposing $25 million in disgorgement in an FCPA case); SEC v. Textron, No. 07-cv-1505 (D.D.C. Aug. 31, 2007) (imposing $2.3 million in disgorgement in an FCPA case).

[19] See SEC v. First City Financial Corp., Ltd., 890 F.2d 1215, 1231 (D.C. Cir. 1989) ("disgorgement need only be a reasonable approximation of profits causally connected to the violation.").

[20] Joseph P. Kennedy, Chairman, SEC, Remarks before the National Press Club (July 15, 1934) at 3, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/speech/1934/072534kennedy.pdf.

disgorgement remedy constitutes a "penalty" and is therefore subject to the five-year statute of limitations in 28 U.S.C. § 2462.[21]

I understand that in the wake of Kokesh there has been discussion about extending the statute of limitations for disgorgement and penalties. Title 28 U.S.C. § 2462 sets a five-year limitations period for the SEC in seeking any civil fine, penalty, or forfeiture. It states:

> Except as otherwise provided by Act of Congress, an action, suit or proceeding for the enforcement of any civil fine, penalty, or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise, shall not be entertained unless commenced within five years from the date when the claim first accrued if, within the same period, the offender or the property is found within the United States in order that proper service may be made thereon.[22]

Although I believe it is critical for the SEC to pursue those who commit fraud, I am concerned that the costs of extending the applicable statute of limitations may greatly outweigh the benefits. Statutes of limitations and statutes of repose serve a vital societal interest in providing stability and certainty, and preventing the litigation of stale claims.[23] Five years is the longest period of limitations or repose found in any of the federal securities laws. Extending the Section 2462 statute of limitations beyond that would create uncertainty for the investing public because of the possibility of the SEC prosecuting stale claims. It also could open the door for inefficiencies in the way the SEC investigates cases if more time is allotted to bring actions. SEC investigations already are time and resource consuming affairs. In FY2016, the SEC planned to bring 65% of enforcement actions within the first two years of opening an investigation.[24] It achieved a 53% rate.[25] In FY2017, the SEC also targeted 65%. It achieved a 52% rate.[26] The SEC is targeting 65% again in 2018.[27] Investigations are costly on those responding. A July 2015 Chamber of Commerce report cited a survey indicating that the average costs for responding to a formal [21] See Kokesh v. SEC, 137 S. Ct. 1635 (2017). Previously, in 2013, the Supreme Court held in Gabelli v. SEC that civil penalties sought by the SEC also are subject to a five-year statute of limitations under Section 2462. See 568 U.S. 442 (2013).

---

[22] See 28 U.S.C. § 2462.

[23] Kokesh, 137 S. Ct. at 1641 ("Statutes of limitations 'se[t] a fixed date when exposure to the specified Government enforcement efforts en[d].' . . . Such limits are "'vital to the welfare of society'" and rest on the principle that "'even wrongdoers are entitled to assume that their sins may be forgotten.'") (citation omitted); see also Artis v. District of Columbia, 138 S. Ct. 594, 607-08 (2018) ("We do not gainsay that statutes of limitations are 'fundamental to a well-ordered judicial system.'"); Gabelli, 568 U.S. at 448 ("the basic policies of all limitations provisions [are] repose, elimination of stale claims, and certainty about a plaintiff's opportunity for recovery and a defendant's potential liabilities") (citation omitted).

[24] See Securities and Exchange Commission Fiscal Year 2018 Congressional Budget Justification Annual Performance Plan and Fiscal Year 2016 Annual Performance Report at 35 (May 23, 2017), available at https://www.sec.gov/reports-and-publications/budget-reports/secfy18congbudgjust.

[25] See id.

[26] See Securities and Exchange Commission Fiscal Year 2019 Congressional Budget Justification Annual Performance Plan and Fiscal Year 2017 Annual Performance Report at 109 (Feb. 12, 2018), available at https://www.sec.gov/reports-and-publications/budget-reports/secfy19congbudgjust.

[27] See id.

investigation surpassed $1 million for 70% of the formal investigations surveyed; and they surpassed $20 million for 10% of those investigations.[28]

In my two decades of experience as a defense lawyer, an SEC enforcement investigation into potential securities law violations by a public company—even an investigation that ultimately does not find any violations of law—can take several years, distract management, and cost the company tens of millions of dollars. The cost of that investigation is borne directly by the shareholders of the company. Of particular concern are SEC enforcement investigations that begin after a news story about a high-profile company, prompting the Enforcement Staff to pursue one theory of liability, but then morph into open-ended investigations that wander into other areas of a company in search of a potential violation. This is particularly disconcerting when it comes to new companies, start-ups, and technology companies that oftentimes find that scrutiny in the press translates into scrutiny by the Enforcement Staff. SEC investigations can impede entrepreneurship and innovation. I understand the current leadership of the SEC is cognizant of these concerns and has been working to address them. Policies and procedures in this area could be improved.[29]

Extending the statute of limitations also could interfere with the SEC's ability to facilitate capital formation. As H.R. 5037 states in its findings, there is declining interest in the United States public market. Extending the statute of limitations would increase the regulatory risk and operating costs of accessing the United States' capital markets and could further chill interest in America's capital markets.

In considering any proposed legislation to extend the applicable statute of limitations, it would be helpful for the SEC to explain to this Committee and to the public what, if any, cases the SEC has failed to bring as a result of being time barred. As a practical matter, and speaking from experience, the SEC has the ability to seek a tolling agreement from a person or entity under investigation, thereby stopping the running of the limitations period. It may be that few cases, if any, are missed by the SEC as a result.

---

[28] See U.S. Chamber of Commerce Center for Capital Markets Competitiveness, Examining U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission Enforcement: Recommendations on Current Processes and Practices at 40 (July 2015), available at https://www.centerforcapitalmarkets.com/wp-content/uploads/2015/07/021882_SEC_Reform_FIN1.pdf.

[29] Relatedly, the SEC should remove the names of Enforcement Staff from SEC press releases announcing enforcement actions. Currently, these releases identify the individual attorneys who supervised, led, and assisted in the investigation. This individual recognition can incentivize the Enforcement Staff to pursue headline-grabbing enforcement actions and sanctions, such as a record penalty amount. Former Enforcement Staff members often tout these high-profile actions on their law firm profiles after they leave government service. The incentive to seek recognition for bringing a high-profile enforcement action can cloud the Staff's focus when determining, for example, whether to commence an investigation against a high-profile company or individual, the scope of such an investigation, the appropriate time to close such an investigation, and the size of the penalty to be imposed if a securities law violation has occurred. The mission of the SEC would be better served by removing individual incentives to seek public recognition.

RESTORING CREDIBILITY TO ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS

The SEC's administrative proceedings also have garnered a significant amount of recent attention. The SEC has the authority to pursue enforcement actions in administrative proceedings over which an administrative law judge appointed by the SEC presides. Until the Dodd-Frank Act, only registered individuals and entities such as broker-dealers and investment advisers were subject to enforcement actions in administrative proceedings. By registering with the SEC, these entities effectively agreed to be subject to the SEC's administrative enforcement jurisdiction in a manner analogous to an attorney who agrees to be subject to the rules of the bar of the state where he or she is licensed to practice.

Through the Remedies Act of 1990, Congress authorized the SEC to impose monetary penalties on regulated entities in administrative proceedings. It also authorized the SEC to pursue remedial relief such as "cease-and-desist" and disgorgement orders against non-regulated entities, but it did not authorize the SEC to seek monetary penalties against issuers and non-regulated persons in administrative proceedings. The concern among members of Congress and internally at the SEC was that if the same remedies against issuers were available to the SEC under both judicial and administrative proceedings, then the SEC might be perceived to have an incentive to conduct more enforcement actions through its own administrative proceedings, rather than before a federal district court judge.[30] The Dodd-Frank Act of 2010 removed this important distinction by authorizing the SEC to impose monetary penalties against issuers in administrative proceedings and authorized the SEC to bring actions against non-regulated persons and entities.

Since the enactment of Dodd-Frank, several respondents have challenged the constitutionality of the SEC's administrative proceedings by filing lawsuits in federal district court arguing that the SEC's administrative proceedings process is unconstitutional.[31] Others argue that administrative proceedings threaten to deprive them of liberty and property without due process, and that the SEC had unfairly singled them out in administrative proceedings in violation of the equal protection clause. To date, most courts have rejected these arguments. Nevertheless, some market participants continue to believe that administrative proceedings are unfair because respondents in administrative proceedings do not enjoy all of the procedural safeguards that are afforded to defendants in federal district court, particularly with respect to depositions, document discovery, rules of evidence, and the ability to confront accusers.

This perceived unfairness may be due to the fact that the SEC appears to have won more frequently in administrative proceedings than in district court. In 2015, The Wall Street Journal reported that from October 2010 through March 2015, the SEC won 90% of its administrative proceedings, while in the same period the SEC prevailed in only 69% of the cases it brought in federal district court.[32] Furthermore, a 2016 study suggested that, after Dodd-Frank, the SEC has shifted weaker cases from district court to administrative proceedings or has brought actions as administrative proceedings that it would not have brought at all before Dodd-Frank.[33]

---

[30] Paul S. Atkins & Bradley J. Bondi, Evaluating the Mission: A Critical Review of the History and Evolution of the SEC Enforcement Program, 13 FORDHAM J. CORP. & FIN. L. at 393-94.

[31] The issue of whether administrative law judges of the SEC are officers of the United States within the meaning of the appointments clause of the Constitution is presently before the Supreme Court. See Lucia v. SEC, Docket No. 17-130 (argued April 23, 2018).

In July 2016, the SEC adopted amendments updating its rules of practice governing administrative proceedings.[34] Most importantly, the amended rules extend the length of the prehearing period to allow respondents more time to prepare for administrative hearings; allow for depositions in complex cases (not just when witnesses are unavailable to testify at the hearing); and permit the exclusion of "unreliable" evidence. Although the amendments provide some new safeguards to respondents, they fall short of the procedural safeguards afforded to defendants in federal district court. And, above all, they do not establish criteria for determining when the SEC will bring a case in an administrative proceeding rather than in federal court.

A recent report suggests that the SEC might be moving away from its reliance on administrative proceedings. According to a May 2018 report by the NYU Pollack Center for Law & Business and Cornerstone Research, in the first half of 2018, the percentage of new enforcement actions against public companies that were brought as administrative proceedings declined to 80%, which was down from 94% for the second half of 2017.[35] According to the report, this is the lowest percentage since the first half of 2014.[36] I commend the Commission for this encouraging trend.

I have been asked to comment on H.R. 2128, The "Due Process Restoration Act of 2017." H.R. 2128 would allow respondents in an administrative proceeding to remove the proceeding to federal district court and thereby avail themselves of the procedural safeguards of federal court, namely the robust federal discovery system, pre-trial motions, and trial before a jury. It also would raise the standard of proof in an administrative proceeding from "preponderance of the evidence" to a higher "clear and convincing." In other words, the burden of proof for the SEC would be higher in an administrative proceeding than in federal court.

---

[32] Jean Eaglesham, SEC Wins With In-House Judges, Wall St. J. (May 6, 2015), available at http://www.wsj.com/articles/sec-wins-with-in-house-judges-1430965803.

[33] Adam C. Pritchard & Stephen Choi, The SEC's Shift to Administrative Proceedings: An Empirical Assessment (2016), Law & Economics Working Papers, Paper 119, available at http://repository.law.umich.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1233&context=law_econ_current.

[34] See Press Release, SEC, SEC Adopts Amendments to Rules of Practice for Administrative Proceedings (July 13, 2016), Release No. 2016-142, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/pressrelease/2016-142.html; see also Bradley J. Bondi et al., SEC Adopts Amendments to Rules of Practice for Administrative Proceedings, Cahill Gordon & Reindel LLP (July 15, 2016), https://www.cahill.com/publications/firm-memoranda/10130405/_res/id=Attachments/index=0/CGR%20Memo%20-%20SEC%20Adopts%20Amendments%20to%20Rules%20of%20Practice%20for%20Administrative%20Proceedings.pdf.

[35] See SEC Enforcement Actions against Public Companies Continue Sharp Decline, NYU Pollack Center for Law & Business and Cornerstone Research (May 15, 2018), available at http://www.stern.nyu.edu/experience-stern/news-events/sec-enforcement-actions-against-public-companies-continue-sharp-decline.

[36] See id. at 2.

While I believe that reform of the administrative process is warranted, and H.R. 2128 is one attempt, the bill may go too far and have the effect of causing the SEC to initiate all enforcement actions in federal district court. Yet, not all enforcement actions require the formality of federal district court. Some cases, such as those involving disciplinary actions against registered investment professionals and so-called "follow-on" actions following a criminal prosecution, could be adequately brought as administrative proceedings, thereby avoiding adding to the already crowded federal docket.

An alternative to consider is a return to the pre-Dodd-Frank jurisdiction of administrative proceedings (that is, to limit administrative proceedings to only those against registered individuals and entities such as broker-dealers and investment advisers); to provide additional due process safeguards such as the ability of respondents to take depositions and to make pre-trial motions; and/or to limit administrative proceedings to disputes below a certain dollar amount.

IMPOSITION OF FEDERAL JURISDICTION OVER CIVIL SECURITIES FRAUD ACTIONS

I also have been asked to comment on H.R. 5037 entitled, "Securities Fraud Act of 2018." H.R. 5037 would provide the federal government with exclusive authority to prosecute civil securities fraud by preempting all state enforcement of civil securities fraud involving an issuer listed on a national securities exchange. H.R. 5037 also would require any criminal proceedings for securities fraud that are brought by the states to comply with the same legal requirements for bringing such claims under federal law.

From my experience, I generally agree with H.R. 5037's observation that "[i]mposing differing State regulatory requirements for civil securities fraud on national markets increases risk, creates inefficiencies, raises costs, and can harm the efficient operation of these critical markets, without providing material investor protection benefits."

At present, states may pursue civil enforcement of securities laws against public companies that are trading on national exchanges. That allows a single state to become a national securities regulator. There have been a few notable instances in which states have brought aggressive enforcement actions against public companies even where those companies already had settled with the SEC and paid substantial penalties. The inability of a public company to achieve certainty in a settlement with the SEC and the threat of another enforcement action by a state harms the investing shareholders who must bear the burden of any penalty.

Fortunately, with only a few rare exceptions, the states have worked closely and cooperatively with one another and with the SEC to ensure the fair and just enforcement of securities laws, and I commend the North American Securities Administrators Association ("NASAA") and its President, Alabama Securities Commissioner Joe Borg, for their efforts to coordinate and develop a uniform set of laws.

States serve an important role in the investigation and enforcement of securities laws. In 2016, the states conducted 4,341 investigations and brought 2,017 enforcement actions.[37] In total, the states obtained $231 million in restitution for investors.[38] Importantly, the vast majority of the matters investigated and brought by the states were not matters that also were being pursued by the SEC.

While the underlying idea of H.R. 5037 represents a thoughtful and encouraging effort toward achieving greater uniformity and predictability in the state and federal enforcement of securities laws, I have four primary concerns with the bill. First, the bill would prohibit state regulators from pursuing civil violations of law, no matter the size. At present, state regulators are often on the front line pursuing microcap fraud cases, much of which the SEC is not pursuing as a result of efforts by the states. Indeed, allowing state regulators to bring these localized enforcement actions conserves the SEC's resources and often serves as the most efficient avenue to pursue these cases. Second, the bill would place a tremendous burden on the SEC to pursue all actions involving publicly-traded companies that previously were pursued by the states. This would necessitate expanding the SEC's budget and resources. Third, the legislation might have the intended consequence of causing some state regulators to convert what otherwise might have been brought as a civil fraud case to a criminal case in order to avoid federal preemption. Fourth and finally, the legislation appears to preempt only actions against issuers, while presumably allowing states to pursue related matters against underwriters, officers, and directors. Any preemption should cover all related matters.

As an alternative, the Committee may wish to consider preempting state law with a uniform federal standard for securities fraud, but to allow enforcement by both the states and the federal government with a "first in time" approach to avoid duplicate enforcement actions.[39] A single federal standard would lower the uncertainty of having to deal with multiple state standards and address the root concern with certain over-expansive state laws. If the Committee wishes to pursue the current legislation, it may wish to consider preempting only cases involving publicly-traded companies above a certain market capitalization amount to alleviate the potential overburdening of the SEC.

CONCLUSION

For the most part the SEC does an excellent job adhering to and fulfilling its mission. However, in furtherance of its mission to protect investors and facilitate capital formation, the SEC should adopt clear standards and be more transparent with respect to its approach to penalties, disgorgement, and administrative proceedings.

Congress can help improve the SEC's enforcement program. The bills that I have commented on today represent encouraging and good faith efforts to do just that. But Congress should act

---

[37] See NASAA 2017 Enforcement Report, NASAA (Sept. 26, 2017), available at http://nasaa.cdn.s3.amazonaws.com/wp-content/uploads/2017/09/2017-Enforcement-Report-Based-on-2016-Data.pdf.
[38] Id.
[39] In developing a uniform standard, the drafters should be wary about creating any new causes of action.

cautiously and seek to strike an appropriate balance between administrative proceedings and federal court actions and between federal securities law enforcement and state securities law enforcement. H.R. 2128 helpfully seeks to address the important need for due process safeguards in SEC enforcement proceedings. But it potentially goes too far with respect to administrative proceedings and could result in overburdening the federal courts. H.R. 5037 helpfully seeks to clarify the division of enforcement authority between the federal and state governments. But it potentially eliminates useful functions of state securities enforcement regimes that are complementary to the SEC. I am hopeful that as Congress deliberates over these bills it will find the appropriate balance.

Thank you. I would be pleased to answer any questions.

APPENDIX 1

Improving the SEC's Enforcement Program: A Ten-Point Blueprint for Reform

Bradley J. Bondi

August 17, 2017

With any new Presidential administration comes a new Commission at the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") and an opportunity to evaluate the regulatory priorities. The Division of Enforcement is a key component of the SEC's regulatory program and has enormous influence on the behavior of investors and other market participants. Since its creation, the Division of Enforcement has grown in size and power as Congress has authorized the SEC to enforce additional laws and to seek additional remedies. At the same time, the SEC's enforcement practices have shifted in response to various factors, including financial crises, significant financial frauds, and Congress's legislative priorities.

With the transition to a new Commission, the SEC should take the opportunity to review, evaluate and improve its enforcement program. In light of the SEC's mission to protect investors; maintain fair, orderly, and efficient markets; and facilitate capital formation, the SEC should take steps to ensure it is allocating resources properly, striking an appropriate balance between regulation and enforcement, and protecting the rights of investors and industry participants. Below is a brief, ten-point summary of suggestions for improving the SEC's enforcement program.

1. Establish Clear Enforcement Priorities Focused on Intentional Violations by Individuals Who Commit Significant Frauds and Refer Criminal Matters to Criminal Agencies

The SEC should prioritize seeking out and penalizing those individuals, such as Bernie Madoff and Allen Stanford, who commit intentional wrongdoing through schemes designed to defraud investors. The "broken windows" approach, promoted by then-SEC Chair Mary Jo White, disproportionately emphasizes small and sometimes unintentional securities law violations in the hope that doing so will deter more significant violations. But a practical consequence of this is the disproportionate expenditure of the SEC's limited resources on small and unintentional violations, often against well-intentioned executives and chief compliance officers for negligence-based violations or honest mistakes. As a result, more significant and intentional violations, such as Ponzi schemes, boiler rooms, and bucket shops, may go undetected, unpunished, and undeterred.

The SEC should coordinate more closely with other federal and state agencies, including the Department of Justice ("DOJ") and State Attorneys General, to pursue and bring to justice Ponzi schemers and other fraudulent schemers. In the past, competition between the SEC and DOJ has prevented the most severe charges from being levied against individuals as the SEC Staff has been reluctant to "lose" a case to the DOJ by involving the DOJ in the investigation. Under an improved system, the SEC would consult the DOJ and the relevant State Attorney General during the SEC's investigation and not hesitate to refer matters where federal or state criminal charges clearly are warranted.

2. Reconsider the "Broken Windows" Policy

The SEC should reconsider its broad application of the broken windows policy for enforcing the securities laws. The broken windows approach, which is rooted in criminal law, is based on the idea that law enforcement's refusal to tolerate minor violations of the law will aid in preventing major violations of the law. While the broken windows philosophy may have worked well for law enforcement concerned with public safety, it is not an appropriate approach to securities regulation. Petty street crime and major crime share a common element: criminal intent. In contrast, not everyone who violates the securities laws intends to do so. For example, an investment adviser who pores over the lengthy, detailed, and complicated regulations applicable to her industry may, despite her best efforts, inadvertently violate a rule. That is much different than the state of mind of a Ponzi schemer who intentionally defrauds individuals out of their life savings. Yet a broken windows approach suggests taking a hard line to enforcement in each case and ignores the mental state of the alleged violator. The SEC should consider abandoning this policy as it applies to unintentional violations of securities law and instead focus its resources on identifying and punishing intentional misconduct while providing useful regulatory guidance to those in the industry who are earnestly trying to comply with the law.

3. Place Less Emphasis on Enforcement Statistics and Penalty Amounts

The SEC should develop and use better metrics for measuring success. Last October, at the end of its 2016 fiscal year, the SEC issued a press release announcing that the 868 enforcement actions it filed in 2016 were a "new single year high."[1] It also announced that it had obtained approximately $4 billion in disgorgement and penalties. This was the third year in a row that the SEC announced a record number of enforcement actions.[2]

The number of enforcement actions and the amount of disgorgement and penalties purportedly demonstrate the success of the SEC's enforcement program. But if the aim of the program is to protect investors and deter wrongdoing, then the high numbers of enforcement actions and penalties are, at best, a poor way to measure that protection and deterrence. At worst, record numbers are an indication that securities law violations are increasing in number and severity. After all, few would consider a local police force successful in deterring crime if it announced record numbers of arrests year after year. In addition, the SEC's focus on achieving record numbers could have the practical effect of disproportionately allocating scarce resources to pursuing a large volume of minor or unintentional violations involving large companies (and thus leading to large penalty figures) at the expense of pursuing fewer but more complicated cases involving intentional wrongdoing such as Ponzi schemes, boiler rooms, and bucket shops, which have a disproportionately negative impact on retail investors. A focus on enforcement statistics also may lead the SEC to develop and pursue theories of liability that exceed the bounds of the SEC's congressionally-authorized enforcement power.[3]

[1] See Press Release, SEC, SEC Announces Enforcement Results for FY 2016 (Oct. 11, 2016), Release No. 2016-212, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/pressrelease/2016-212.html.

[2] See Press Release, SEC, SEC's FY 2014 Enforcement Actions Span Securities Industry and Include First-Ever Cases (Oct. 16, 2014), Release No. 2014-230, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/press-release/2014-230 ("In the fiscal year that ended in September, the SEC filed a record 755 enforcement actions . . . ."); Press Release, SEC, SEC Announces Enforcement Results for FY 2015 (Oct. 22, 2015), Release No. 2015-245, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/pressrelease/2015-245.html ("In the fiscal year that ended in September, the SEC filed 807 enforcement actions . . . .").

The SEC's past emphasis on obtaining large penalties against corporations, coupled with press releases that identify its Enforcement Staff attorneys by name,[4] creates incentives that may be misaligned with the core mission of the SEC of protecting investors, namely the innocent shareholders who must bear the cost of a corporate monetary penalty.

4. Update the Benefits for Assisting the SEC as Articulated in the Seaboard Report

Since 2001, the SEC has had a written policy, often known as the Seaboard Report[5], for determining whether, and how much, to credit self-policing, self-reporting, remediation, and cooperation. When it issued the Seaboard Report, the SEC stated that such credit could range from the extraordinary step of taking no enforcement action to bringing reduced charges, seeking lighter sanctions, or including mitigating language in documents used to announce and resolve enforcement actions.

---

[3] This so-called "regulation by enforcement" is contrary to the SEC's rulemaking authority and violates fundamental principles of due process that require regulatory agencies to provide a notice and comment period for new or modified rules. See Bradley J. Bondi, Dangerous Liaisons: Collective Scienter in SEC Enforcement Actions, 6 N.Y.U. J. Law & Bus. 1, 16 n.64 (2009) (quoting then-Commissioner Paul Atkins, who said, "[i]f we are to enforce the rule of law, we must follow the rule of law in our approach"); see also Theodore W. Urban, SEC Administrative Proceeding File No. 3-13655, Initial Decision Release No. 402 (September 8, 2010), dismissed by Exchange Act Release No. 66359 (January 26, 2012).

[4] Similarly, the SEC should remove the names of Enforcement Staff from SEC releases. The University of Southern California famously does not put players' names on the back of its football jerseys. The purported reason is to emphasize the achievement of the team and not any individual player. The SEC should take a similar approach to its releases announcing enforcement actions. Currently, these releases identify the individual attorneys who supervised, led, and assisted in the investigation. This individual recognition can incentivize the Staff to pursue headline-grabbing enforcement actions and sanctions, such as a record penalty amount. Former Enforcement Staff members often tout these high-profile actions on their law firm profiles after they leave government service. The incentive to seek recognition for bringing a high-profile enforcement action can cloud the Staff's focus when determining, for example, whether to commence an investigation against a high-profile company or individual, the scope of such an investigation, the appropriate time to close such an investigation, and the size of the penalty to be imposed if a securities law violation has occurred. The mission of the SEC would be better served by removing individual incentives to seek public recognition.

[5] Report of Investigation Pursuant to Section 21(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and Commission Statement on the Relationship of Cooperation to Agency Enforcement Decisions, Exchange Act Rel. No. 44969 (Oct. 23, 2001), available at https://www.sec.gov/litigation/investreport/34-44969.htm.

For the SEC, the policy helps uncover and prevent activity harmful to investors that might otherwise go unreported. But companies likely will come forward only to the extent the cooperation policy provides predictable benefits for alerting the SEC to concerns. Some commentators have observed that, under the Seaboard framework, companies and their counsel are unable to assess the implication of self-reporting, which has resulted in a hesitation to take steps that ultimately would benefit the SEC and investors. Others have observed that the "carrots," which the SEC established to encourage cooperation and conserve government and shareholder resources, have become smaller or less certain while the "stick" for failing to cooperate has gotten larger.

The SEC should revisit and update the Seaboard Report to clarify (1) the benefits available for companies that self-police, self-report, cooperate with the SEC, and remediate misconduct and (2) how companies can qualify to receive these benefits, leading to improved investor protection.

5. Evaluate and Clearly Articulate the Reasons for Imposing a Monetary Penalty on Shareholders

In 1990, Congress passed the Remedies Act, which enabled the SEC to seek monetary penalties. At the time, the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs cautioned that the costs of monetary penalties might be passed on to shareholders, and the Committee expected that the SEC would seek a monetary penalty only when the securities law violation had resulted in an improper benefit to shareholders.[6] In cases in which shareholders are the principal victims of the violations, the Committee expected that the SEC, when appropriate, would seek penalties from the individual offenders acting for a corporate issuer.

From 1990 to 2002, the SEC imposed penalties sparingly. The SEC's April 2002 case against Xerox Corporation marked a shift to seeking penalties more frequently and in higher amounts. The $10 million penalty imposed on Xerox for financial fraud was an unprecedented amount at the time and about three times larger than the previous record amount for a similar case.[7] Since the Xerox case, the SEC has levied many civil penalties of $10 million or larger. In 2003, the year after the Xerox case, the total amount of monetary penalties (excluding disgorgement) imposed by the SEC on companies increased to approximately $1.1 billion from approximately $101 million in the prior year.[8] [6] S. Rep. No. 101-337, at 17 (1990).

---

[7] See Press Release, SEC, Xerox Settles SEC Enforcement Action Charging Company With Fraud (Apr. 11, 2002), Release No. 2002-52, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/headlines/xeroxsettles.htm; see also James Bandler and Mark Maremont, Xerox Will Pay $10 Million Penalty to Settle SEC Accounting Charges, Wall St. J. (Apr. 2, 2002), available at https://www.wsj.com/articles/SB1017682255642049000.

[8] See SEC 2002 Annual Report, at 1 (Jan. 1, 2002,) available at https://www.sec.gov/pdf/annrep02/ar02full.pdf ("Civil penalties ordered in SEC proceedings totaled approximately $101 million."); SEC 2003 Annual Report, at 15 (Jan. 1, 2003), available at https://www.sec.gov/pdf/annrep03/ar03full.pdf ("Obtained orders in SEC judicial and administrative proceedings requiring securities violators . . . to pay penalties of approximately $1.1 billion.").

The total annual penalties in fiscal years 2004 and 2005 were approximately $1.2 billion and $1.5 billion, respectively.[9] Then, in January 2006, a unanimous Commission issued the Statement of the Securities and Exchange Commission Concerning Financial Penalties, often known simply as the SEC's "Penalty Statement."[10] The purpose of the Penalty Statement was to provide the maximum possible degree of clarity, consistency, and predictability in explaining how the SEC exercises its corporate penalty authority. In the Penalty Statement, the SEC identified two principal considerations for determining whether a monetary penalty against a company is appropriate: (1) the presence or absence of a direct benefit to the company as a result of the securities law violation and (2) the degree to which the penalty will recompense or further harm the injured shareholders. After the Penalty Statement, annual monetary penalty amounts dropped significantly. In 2008, for example, the SEC imposed approximately $256 million in monetary penalties.[11]

In recent years, some commissioners have disavowed the Penalty Statement. In September 2013, then-Chair Mary Jo White observed that the Penalty Statement is non-binding and, while recognizing that it sets forth useful considerations, stated that each commissioner has discretion within his or her statutory authority to reach a conclusion on whether a penalty is appropriate and how high it should be.[12] A few weeks later, then-Commissioner Luis Aguilar agreed with Chair White's assessment and stated that the Penalty Statement "constituted a fatally flawed approach to assessing the appropriateness of corporate penalties" because it focused on whether the company had benefited from the misconduct and shareholder harm instead of punishing misconduct and deterring future violations.[13] Since 2013, the average annual amount of monetary penalties (excluding disgorgement) imposed has been approximately $1.25 billion.[14] The disavowal of the Penalty Statement creates unpredictability regarding the criteria the SEC considers when determining whether to impose a penalty. For an agency that demands from companies that their disclosures be transparent, the SEC historically has offered little transparency of its own.

---

[9] See United States Securities and Exchange Commission 2004 Enforcement and Market Data, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secpar04stats%2C0.pdf; Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2005, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2005%2C0.pdf.

[10] See Press Release, SEC, Statement of the Securities and Exchange Commission Concerning Financial Penalties (Jan. 4, 2006), Release No. 2006-4, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/press/2006-4.htm.

[11] See Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2008, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2008.pdf.

[12] Mary Jo White, Chair, SEC, Remarks before the Council of Institutional Investors Fall Conference: Deploying the Full Enforcement Arsenal (Sept. 26, 2013), available at http://www.sec.gov/News/Speech/Detail/Speech/1370539841202.

[13] Luis A. Aguilar, Commissioner, SEC, Remarks before the 20th Annual Securities Litigation and Regulatory Enforcement Seminar: A Stronger Enforcement Program to Enhance Investor Protection (Oct. 25, 2013), available at https://www.sec.gov/news/speech/2013-spch102513laa.

[14] The penalty amount was $1.167 billion in 2013, $1.378 billion in 2014, $1.175 billion in 2015, and $1.273 billion in 2016. See Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2013, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2013.pdf; Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2014, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2014.pdf; Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2015, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/secstats2015.pdf; and Select SEC and Market Data Fiscal 2016, available at https://www.sec.gov/files/2017-03/secstats2016.pdf.

The amount of the monetary penalty is also unpredictable because the SEC in recent years has not articulated criteria or metrics for calculating how much it will penalize a company. This unpredictability negatively impacts companies. For example, the inability to predict the size of a potential penalty hinders the market for mergers and acquisitions because successor companies cannot accurately forecast their regulatory exposure.

This lack of transparency and predictability with respect to monetary penalties is contrary to the SEC's mission to maintain fair, orderly, and efficient markets and facilitate capital formation. In July 1934, Joseph P. Kennedy, the first chairman of the SEC, stated there would be no concealed punishment for businesses subject to the SEC's jurisdiction.[15] In that spirit of transparency, the SEC should provide clear, principled guidance regarding when it will seek a penalty and how it will calculate the amount.

6. Restore Credibility to Administrative Proceedings

The SEC has the authority to pursue enforcement actions in administrative proceedings over which an administrative law judge appointed by the SEC presides. Historically, only registered individuals and entities such as broker-dealers and investment advisers were subject to enforcement actions in administrative proceedings. By registering with the SEC, these entities effectively agreed to be subject to the SEC's administrative enforcement jurisdiction in a manner analogous to an attorney who agrees to be subject to the rules of the bar of the state where he or she is licensed to practice.

In 1990, the Remedies Act authorized the SEC to impose monetary penalties on regulated entities in administrative proceedings. It also authorized the SEC to pursue remedial relief such as "cease-and-desist" and disgorgement orders against non-regulated entities, but it did not authorize the SEC to seek monetary penalties against issuers in administrative proceedings. The concern among members of Congress and internally at the SEC was that if the same remedies against issuers were available to the SEC under both judicial and administrative proceedings, then the SEC might be perceived to have an incentive to conduct more enforcement actions through its own administrative proceedings, rather than before a federal district court judge.[16] The Dodd-Frank Act of 2010 removed this important distinction by authorizing the SEC to impose monetary penalties against issuers in administrative proceedings.

In recent years, several respondents have challenged the constitutionality of the SEC's administrative proceedings by filing lawsuits in federal district court arguing that administrative proceedings threaten to deprive them of liberty and property without due process and that the SEC had unfairly singled them out in administrative proceedings in violation of the equal protection clause. To date, most courts have rejected these arguments. Nevertheless, some market participants continue to believe that administrative proceedings are unfair because respondents in administrative proceedings do not enjoy all of the procedural safeguards that are afforded to defendants in federal district court, especially with respect to depositions, document discovery, rules of evidence, and the ability to confront accusers.

---

[15] Joseph P. Kennedy, Chairman, SEC, Remarks before the National Press Club (July 15, 1934) at 3, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/speech/1934/072534kennedy.pdf.

[16] Paul S. Atkins & Bradley J. Bondi, Evaluating the Mission: A Critical Review of the History and Evolution of the SEC Enforcement Program, 13 Fordham J. Corp. & Fin. L. at 393-94.

This perceived unfairness may be due to the fact that the SEC wins more frequently in administrative proceedings than in district court. In 2015, The Wall Street Journal reported that from October 2010 through March 2015, the SEC won 90% of its administrative proceedings, while in the same period the SEC prevailed in only 69% of the cases it brought in federal district court.[17] Further, a 2016 study suggested that, after Dodd-Frank, the SEC has shifted weaker cases from district court to administrative proceedings or has brought actions as administrative proceedings that it would not have brought at all before Dodd-Frank.[18]

In July 2016, the SEC adopted amendments updating its rules of practice governing administrative proceedings.[19] Most importantly, the amended rules extend the length of the prehearing period to allow respondents more time to prepare for administrative hearings; allow for depositions in complex cases (not just when witnesses are unavailable to testify at the hearing); and permit the exclusion of "unreliable" evidence. While the amendments provide new safeguards to respondents, they fall short of the procedural safeguards afforded to defendants in federal district court. And they do not establish criteria for determining when the SEC will bring a case in an administrative proceeding rather than in federal court.

The SEC could enhance the perception of fairness of its administrative proceedings by adopting additional procedural safeguards that more closely align the proceedings with those in federal district court and by clearly articulating the criteria it uses for determining whether to bring a case in an administrative proceeding instead of in federal district court.

7. Establish an Advisory Committee To Evaluate the Enforcement Program

In July 2008, then-Commissioner Paul Atkins and I called for an independent advisory committee to evaluate the SEC's enforcement program.[20] Such an advisory committee could be useful at this stage to the SEC. In the spirit of the Wells Committee convened by Chairman William Casey in 1972, the new advisory committee could conduct an independent review of the SEC's enforcement program and recommend any changes needed to modernize enforcement practices. The charge to this advisory committee should be: "What changes

---

[17] Jean Eaglesham, SEC Wins With In-House Judges, Wall St. J. (May 6, 2015), available at http://www.wsj.com/articles/sec-wins-with-in-house-judges-1430965803.

[18] Adam C. Pritchard & Stephen Choi, The SEC's Shift to Administrative Proceedings: An Empirical Assessment (2016), Law & Economics Working Papers, Paper 119, available at http://repository.law.umich.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1233&context=law_econ_current.

[19] See Press Release, SEC, SEC Adopts Amendments to Rules of Practice for Administrative Proceedings (July 13, 2016), Release No. 2016-142, available at https://www.sec.gov/news/pressrelease/2016-142.html.

[20] Paul S. Atkins & Bradley J. Bondi, Needed: Independent Panel to Evaluate SEC Enforcement Program, Forbes (July 7, 2008), available at https://www.forbes.com/2008/07/05/atkins-bondi-sec-oped-cx_pabb_0707atkins.html.

should be made to make the SEC's enforcement program more effective in its efforts to deter misconduct and to encourage compliance with federal securities laws, while keeping with the SEC's stated mission of protecting investors; maintaining fair, orderly, and efficient markets; and facilitating capital formation?" As the Wells Committee did, this advisory committee also could examine whether the SEC is taking appropriate steps to protect the rights of respondents and to provide appropriate due process. The advisory committee could be composed of a diverse cross-section of private-practice attorneys, former SEC officials, economists, and academicians – each bringing to the table a unique perspective.

8. Rescind the Delegation of Formal Order Authority

Historically, the Commission approved formal orders of investigation after the Enforcement Staff prepared a memorandum for the Commission summarizing the facts known at the time and the possible securities law violations. The historical process had at least three important benefits.21 First, under the prior system, before seeking a formal order the Enforcement Staff often would engage in informal detective work. This frequently involved seeking information, on a voluntary basis, from the entity under investigation. This informal work sometimes provided the Enforcement Staff assurance that there had been no wrongdoing and allowed the Staff and the entity to forego a more elaborate and costly investigation. Second, under the prior system the Commission was involved in the early stages of enforcement cases, allowing it to provide guidance to the Enforcement Staff prior to the time that the Staff was authorized to compel testimony and issue wide-ranging document subpoenas. The Commission's approval of a formal order also provided an important check on the Enforcement Staff's investigative power and may have prevented questionable investigations. Third, under the prior system, the fact that the Enforcement Staff had opened an investigation was raised to the highest levels of the SEC, including to the Commission, senior officers in the Division of Enforcement, directors of the other divisions, as well as anyone who attended the closed Commission meeting where the matter was discussed. This allowed enhanced communication and expertise to be incorporated into the early decision-making and formulation of the investigative plan.

In 2009, the Commission delegated authority to the Director of Enforcement to open formal orders of investigation and issue subpoenas. The Director then subdelegated this authority to Regional Directors, Associate Directors, and Specialized Unit Chiefs. This delegation reduced the Enforcement Staff's incentive to conduct informal, initial detective work, removed the beneficial early involvement of the Commission, and eliminated a critical opportunity for the Enforcement Staff to communicate and cooperate regarding investigations.

In February 2017, the Commission rescinded the subdelegation of formal order authority. Now, requests for formal orders will be approved by the Director of Enforcement. The Commission should go one step further and rescind the delegation of formal order authority entirely, thereby restoring the benefits associated with encouraging the Enforcement Staff to conduct investigations informally, involving the Commission early in the investigative process, and communicating and cooperating with other Enforcement Staff.

---

[21] For additional information, see Bradley J. Bondi, A Questionable Delegation of Authority: Did the SEC Go Too Far When It Delegated Authority to the Division of Enforcement to Initiate an Investigation? Center for Financial Stability, (Sept. 20, 2016), available at http://www.centerforfinancialstability.org/research/Bondi_092016.pdf.

9. Re-evaluate the SEC's Admissions Policy

The SEC should re-evaluate how it determines whether to require a party to admit fault as a condition of settlement. Since the establishment of the Division of Enforcement in 1972, the SEC routinely has allowed parties to settle enforcement actions without admitting fault.[22] The neither-admit-nor-deny concept grew out of the practical reality that the Enforcement Staff would be more likely to obtain a settlement and thus conserve SEC resources if the Staff did not insist on an admission of wrongdoing, which can have damaging collateral consequences.

In 2013, the SEC modified this practice by announcing that it would seek more admissions of wrongdoing from individuals and entities as a condition of settling enforcement cases. And the Director of Enforcement at the time stated that the SEC would not consider the collateral consequences to an individual or entity when determining whether to seek an admission. This policy created four primary concerns. First, it marked a fundamental shift in emphasis from protecting investors to attempting to punish wrongdoers, which may be at odds with the SEC's goals of protecting investors and facilitating capital formation. An admission of wrongdoing may result in additional harm to shareholders by exposing a company to costly shareholder litigation or depriving it of the ability to obtain government contracts. Second, the admissions policy lacks clear guidance and fails to consider the collateral consequences to the shareholders of the alleged wrongdoer company. This makes the admissions policy susceptible to subjective application without considering the individualized conduct of the responding party. Third, the admissions policy is susceptible to being used directly or indirectly as a negotiating tool by which the SEC may seek a higher penalty in exchange for not seeking an admission. For example, the Enforcement Staff may make overtures that, if a party were to agree to a higher penalty, the Staff would not push for an admission of wrongdoing. Fourth, pursuing admissions of wrongdoing consumes valuable SEC time and resources.

One suggestion that would allow the policy to remain intact while taking into consideration the above observations would be to remove any discretion from the investigative staff and place that discretion into the hands of the trial unit to evaluate whether the evidence is so strong that it would risk taking the matter to trial. Another possible solution would be for the Enforcement Staff to obtain from the Commission at the start of settlement negotiations a determination regarding whether the Commission would insist on an admission of wrongdoing.

That course would enable the parties to negotiate under the same understanding of whether an admission is, in fact, likely to be sought.

---

[22] For additional information, see Bradley J. Bondi, An Evaluation of the SEC's Admissions Policy, Center for Financial Stability (July 7, 2016), available at http://www.centerforfinancialstability.org/research/Bondi_070716.pdf.

10. Expand the Division of Enforcement's Trial Unit and Integrate the Trial Attorneys into the Investigative Units

Assuming the SEC focuses more on intentional wrongdoing by individuals, as recommended in Point 1 above, the SEC's trial load will increase. The SEC should increase the number of attorneys in its trial unit to meet the increased caseload.

At the same time the SEC expands the trial unit, SEC trial unit attorneys should be more fully integrated into the investigative units of the Division of Enforcement. During her tenure, Chair White made some progress in this regard after the SEC suffered a series of defeats at trial, but more integration can be done.[23] Structurally, the Division of Enforcement's trial attorneys are separate from the investigative attorneys. This antiquated organizational structure has resulted in inefficiencies and loss of information that have impacted the Division of Enforcement's effectiveness. With this bifurcated structure, enforcement actions run the risk of proceeding to trial without sufficient "trial" evidence obtained during the investigation. By more fully integrating trial attorneys into the investigative units, the attorneys tasked with proving securities law violations at trial will have a greater role in charging decisions and gathering evidence of violations early in investigations.[24] This likely will strengthen the development of admissible evidence during the investigation and result in stronger enforcement actions. In addition, trial attorneys provide an important check on the investigative staff to ensure that the elements of a securities law violation are met prior to initiating a lawsuit or settling an enforcement action.

The Center for Financial Stability (CFS) is a private, nonprofit institution focusing on global finance and markets. Its research is nonpartisan. This publication reflects the judgments and recommendations of the author(s). They do not necessarily represent the views of Members of the Advisory Board or Trustees, whose involvement in no way should be interpreted as an endorsement of the report by either themselves or the organizations with which they are affiliated.

[23] See Jean Eaglesham, SEC Takes Steps to Stem Courtroom Defeats, Wall St. J. (Feb. 13, 2014), available at https://www.wsj.com/articles/sec-takes-steps-to-stem-courtroom-defeats-1392336091.

[24] See also Troy A. Paredes, Commissioner, SEC, Remarks at the 2009 Southeastern Securities Conference (Mar. 19, 2009), available at https://www.sec.gov/news/speech/2009/spch031909tap.htm.

APPENDIX 2

Fordham Journal of Corporate & Financial Law

Volume 13, Number 3 | 2008 | Article 1

Evaluating the Mission: A Critical Review of the History and Evolution of the SEC Enforcement Program

Paul S. Atkins* Bradley J. Bondi†

*

†

Copyright ©2008 by the authors. Fordham Journal of Corporate & Financial Law is produced by The Berkeley Electronic Press (bepress). http://ir.lawnet.fordham.edu/jcfl

ARTICLES

EVALUATING THE MISSION: A CRITICAL REVIEW OF THE HISTORY AND EVOLUTION OF THE SEC ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM

By Paul S. Atkins and Bradley J. Bondi[*]

[*] Paul S. Atkins is a commissioner of the United States Securities and Exchange Commission and is a member of the New York and Florida Bars. Bradley J. Bondi serves as counsel to Commissioner Atkins and is a member of the District of Columbia, New York, and Florida Bars. The views expressed herein reflect the views of the authors and do not necessarily reflect those of the SEC or other Commissioners. The authors wish to extend their thanks and appreciation for the advice and significant contributions of Kechi Anyadike, Jan Bauer, Brenden P. Carroll, W. Blair Hopkin, Hester M. Peirce, Mark T. Uyeda, and numerous others. All blame for any errors or omissions, however, resides solely with the authors.

The United States Securities and Exchange Commission (the "SEC" or "Commission") is nearing its seventy-fifth anniversary, a milestone that will be marked by reflection on the past and contemplation of the future.[1] During this time of introspection, the Commission should take the opportunity to examine the manner in which it has reacted to the growth and changes in its regulatory authority and in the capital markets. One constant throughout its history has been the SEC's need to balance competing interests. The SEC's stated mission reflects this tension. Today, that mission is composed of three objectives: "to protect investors; maintain fair, orderly, and efficient markets; and facilitate capital formation."[2]

Historically, the SEC's mission has focused on investor protection. As the SEC and its regulatory powers have grown in response to the ever more complex and international financial services markets, the seemingly straightforward mission of investor protection has become more intricate and multidimensional, prompting questions such as, "Who are the investors that should be protected?" and "How should they be protected?" After all, investors range in sophistication, size, activity, goals, needs, and other attributes. They include traditional individual and institutional investors in the securities markets, traders, and foreign entities seeking to invest in the United States.[3] Choices that the SEC makes in its rulemaking and other activities can favor or disfavor one group of investors over another. A rule beneficial for one investor may be detrimental to another, depending on an investor's investment strategy or changing circumstances. Indeed, because investors ultimately pay for inefficiencies arising from regulatory mandates

---

1. The SEC was created on July 2, 1934 during a period of heated debate over the country's economic turmoil. That day was literally heated: 93 degrees Fahrenheit, to be exact. The Federal Trade Commission met in an unairconditioned, temporary building in Washington, D.C., located on the present site of the Federal Reserve Building, to vote the SEC into existence pursuant to the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. Frank V. Fowlkes, Agency Report/Congress Prods SEC To Get Firmer Grip on Nation's Securities Industry, NATIONAL JOURNAL, Feb. 20, 1971, at 385.

2. U.S. SEC. & EXCH. COMM'N, 2006 PERFORMANCE AND ACCOUNTABILITY REPORT 5, available at http://www.sec.gov/about/secpar/secpar2006.pdf [hereinafter 2006 REPORT].

3. One group of foreign investors, sovereign wealth funds, has received much attention by the press in recent years. Sovereign wealth funds are estimated currently at $2.5 trillion and expected to grow to $10 to 15 trillion by 2015. Robert M. Kimmitt, Public Footprints in Private Markets, FOREIGN AFFAIRS, Jan./Feb. 2008, at 1-2, available at http://www.foreignaffairs.org/20080101faessay87109/robert-m-kimmitt/public-footprints-in-private-markets.html.

through direct or indirect costs, diminished returns, and reduced choice, the rules must be made with careful analysis and deliberation. Congress acknowledged this potential harm in 1996 when it revised the SEC's statutory mandate to expressly require the SEC "to consider or determine whether an action is necessary or appropriate in the public interest" and to "consider, in addition to the protection of investors, whether the action will promote efficiency, competition, and capital formation."[4]

This multidimensional aspect of investor protection applies not only to rulemaking, but also to enforcement matters. Each enforcement matter involves in some degree a balancing of competing interests, some at a pragmatic, case-specific level and others at a higher policy level. For example, in distributing money recovered in an enforcement action against a bankrupt company, the SEC conceivably could decline a distribution to all investors and instead choose a distribution that favors one class of investor over another, such as common stockholders over senior debtholders, which by virtue of their preferred position may have had greater recovery per dollar invested than did common stockholders, but still fell short of their desired recovery. In its overall enforcement program, the SEC's decisions about resource allocation, charges to be brought, and relief to be sought may enhance the protection of one group of investors at the potential cost of another. Advancing a novel legal theory may protect the group of investors in a particular case, but have unintended detrimental consequences to investors as a whole.[5]

The enforcement decisions of the SEC must be guided by the multidimensional nature of the SEC's mission of protecting investors; maintaining fair, orderly, and efficient markets; and facilitating capital formation. The difficult choices of balancing conflicting interests must be guided by the transcendent principles of predictability, fairness, and transparency, culminating in the rule of law. These principles are the defining characteristics of the U.S. markets.

In order to assess the SEC's application of these principles to its enforcement decisions, this Article investigates the shifting focus of the SEC's enforcement program from its inception to the present day. The Article explores the development and usage of the SEC's statutory enforcement powers in the context of due process and fairness. Finally,

---

4. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 3(f), 15 U.S.C. § 78c(f) (2006).

5. See, e.g., Stoneridge Inv. Partners, LLC v. Scientific-Atlanta, Inc., – U.S. –, 128 S.Ct. 761 (2008).

the Article calls for the Commission to appoint an independent advisory committee to conduct a detailed review and evaluation of the policies and procedures of the enforcement program in light of the changes in the SEC's statutory authority over the course of the last three decades.

THE ORGANIZATION OF THE SEC

The SEC is governed by five commissioners, all of whom are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.[6] One of the commissioners is designated as chairman by an executive order of the President.[7] To ensure bipartisanship, Congress specified that only three of the five commissioners can belong to the same political party.[8]

The SEC is organized into four primary operating divisions and nineteen "offices," or special service units, each of which is headquartered in Washington, D.C. The SEC's staff, numbering approximately 3500, is located in Washington, D.C. and throughout its eleven regional offices.[9] The SEC's largest division—and the focus of

---

6. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 4, 15 U.S.C. § 78d (2006).

7. See Reorganization Plan No. 10 of 1950, 15 Fed. Reg. 3175 (1950), reprinted in 5 U.S.C. 901 et seq. (2006), and in 64 Stat. 1265 (1950); see also 2006 REPORT, supra note 2, at 7. This power of the President to designate (or remove) the chairman by executive order does not apply to similar agencies. For example, the chairmen of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission are separately nominated and confirmed to their positions as chairmen, although they have separate terms as governor or commissioner, respectively. See 12 U.S.C. § 242 (2008) and 7 U.S.C. § 2(a)(2)(B) (2008).

8. Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 4. The first five commissioners were Democrats Joseph P. Kennedy, James M. Landis and Ferdinand Pecora, and Republicans George C. Mathews and Robert E. Healy. The commissioners elected Joseph P. Kennedy to serve as the first chairman. See Fowlkes, supra note 1, at 385.

9. See U.S. SEC. & EXCH. COMM'N, 2007 PERFORMANCE AND ACCOUNTABILITY REPORT 2, available at http://www.sec.gov/about/secpar/secpar2007.pdf [hereinafter 2007 REPORT]. The SEC has grown tremendously since its inception. In 1942, the SEC had a staff of 1700 employees. In order to make room for wartime agencies, the SEC was forced to relocate to Philadelphia in 1942. By the time it returned to Washington in 1948, the staff had decreased to 1150. By 1955, there were only 666 employees. Fowlkes, supra note 1, at 383.

this Article—is the Division of Enforcement, which has more than 1100 employees, and has grown by more than 40% in the past fifteen years.[10]

THE SEC'S AUTHORITY UNDER THE FEDERAL SECURITIES LAWS

Today, the SEC is charged with administering the Securities Act of 1933,[11] the Securities Exchange Act of 1934,[12] the Trust Indenture Act of 1939,[13] the Investment Company Act of 1940,[14] the Investment Advisers Act of 1940,[15] and certain provisions of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act,[16] some of which fall outside of the earlier securities laws.[17]

The Commission is vested with statutory authority to conduct any investigation it deems necessary to determine whether a person has violated federal securities laws and the rules and regulations

10. The Enforcement Division is currently the largest of the divisions and offices of the SEC, with more than 1100 personnel. See Christopher Cox, Chairman, Opening Remarks to the Practising Law Institute's SEC Speaks Series (Feb. 9, 2007), available at http://www.sec.gov/news/speech/2007/spch020907cc.htm. According to information provided by the SEC to Congress, the total number of employees in the Enforcement Division at the end of fiscal year 2008 is expected to be 1124—up from 781 in 1992.

11. Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. §§ 77a-77aa (2006).

12. Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. §§ 78a-78nn (2006); see generally Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, http://www.sec.gov/about/laws.shtml#secexact1934 (last visited May 8, 2008) (discussing some of the many powers granted by the 1934 Act, including regulating corporate reporting, proxy solicitations and tender offers).

13. Trust Indenture Act of 1939, 15 U.S.C. §§ 77aaa-77bbbb (2006) (focusing on debt securities such as bonds, debentures, and notes that are offered for public sale).

14. Investment Company Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. §§ 80a-1 to a-64 (2006) (regulating the organization of companies, including mutual funds, that engage primarily in investing, reinvesting, and trading in securities, and whose own securities are offered to the investing public).

15. Investment Advisers Act of 1940, 15 U.S.C. §§ 80b-1 to b-21 (2006) (regulating investment advisors).

16. Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-204, 116 Stat. 745 (2002) (codified in scattered sections of 11, 15, 18, 28 and 29 U.S.C.) (mandating a number of reforms to enhance corporate responsibility and financial disclosures and to combat corporate and accounting fraud). The Sarbanes-Oxley Act also created the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board to oversee the activities of the auditing profession..

17. On February 8, 2006, the repeal of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 took effect, relieving the SEC of what once arguably was its primary focus. The Act provided for the regulation of multi-state utilities by the SEC. Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, 15 U.S.C. § 79 (repealed 2006).

promulgated thereunder.[18] As part of this investigative authority, the Commissioners—and any officer to whom the Commissioners' authority is delegated—have the power to "administer oaths and affirmations, subpena [sic] witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry."[19] The Commission has delegated these tasks to the Director of the Division of Enforcement, who undertakes them pursuant to formal orders that the Commission grants in individual matters.[20] If the Commission concludes that a securities law has been violated, the Commission may bring an action in federal court or in an administrative proceeding against the purported violators.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE ENFORCEMENT DIVISION

Among its various other roles, the SEC acts to enforce the federal securities laws,[21] and it has built a strong reputation for professionalism and effectiveness in its enforcement program. At the time the Commission was established in 1934, the Commission's "Legal Division" was responsible for conducting investigations pertaining to federal securities law violations.[22] Within the first two years, the Commission assigned that duty to its regional offices.[23] For the next four decades, the regional offices were primarily responsible for conducting investigations and bringing enforcement actions while the Commission's Trading and Markets Division "played a largely supervisory and coordinating role supporting the regions and referring criminal cases to the Justice Department for prosecution."[24] By 1944,

18. See e.g., Securities Act §§ 8(e), 20(a); Securities Exchange Act § 21(a); Investment Company Act § 42(a); Investment Advisers Act § 209(a).

19. Securities Exchange Act § 21(b). Congress has granted similar authority in other provisions of the federal securities laws. See Investment Company Act § 42(b); Investment Advisers Act § 209(b).

20. 17 C.F.R. § 200.30-4(a)(1) (2008).

21. 2007 REPORT, supra note 9, at 2.

22. DANIEL M. HAWKE, A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE SEC'S ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM 1934-1981, at 2 (SEC Historical Society 2002), available at http://www.sechistorical.org/collection/oralHistories/roundtables/enforcement/enforcementHistory.pdf.

23. Id. A copy of the 1939 organization chart of the SEC is available at http://www.sechistorical.org/collection/papers/1930/1939_SEC_OrgChart.pdf.

24. Id. During the SEC's first decade, the Justice Department had a 95% conviction rate from the indictments that it brought based on referrals from the SEC. Id.

after only a decade of existence, the SEC had gathered information "concerning an aggregate of 44,399 persons against whom Federal or State action had been taken with regard to securities violations" and had obtained permanent injunctions against 1,057 firms and individuals.[25]

The second decade of the SEC's existence was marked by World War II and its aftermath. During the war, the SEC's headquarters moved temporarily to Philadelphia to make room for wartime operations in Washington, D.C.[26] When the SEC finally returned to Washington in 1948, it occupied temporary buildings that were erected during the war.[27] Despite the inconveniences caused by the war and post-war budget cuts, the SEC continued to bring a constant number of enforcement actions during this time.[28]

Beginning in the late 1950s and continuing through the 1960s, the enforcement program underwent a remarkable transformation, and the enforcement resources in the SEC's Washington, D.C. headquarters increased. With the added resources, the headquarters began to bring more actions for violations of the securities laws. During the entire decade of the 1950s, the home office brought a total of approximately fifty cases. Yet during the 1960s, that number escalated substantially – the home office brought approximately forty cases per year.[29]

The 1960s witnessed landmark decisions in the field of securities law in cases brought by the SEC, such as SEC v. Texas Gulf Sulfur Co.[30] and SEC v. VTR, Inc.[31] In Texas Gulf Sulfur, the Second Circuit adopted the SEC's application of Rule 10b-5 to insider trading cases by requiring insiders in possession of material, nonpublic information either to abstain from trading on such information or to disclose such information at 13 (quoting TENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION, at 3).

25. Id. at 13 (citing TENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION, at 2-3).

26. Id. at 14.

27. Id.

28. Id.

29. See JOEL SELIGMAN, THE TRANSFORMATION OF WALL STREET: A HISTORY OF THE SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION AND MODERN CORPORATE FINANCE 360-61, 363 (3d ed. 2003). The impetus for the transformation was the enforcement staff's massive investigation into fraudulent practices by the American Stock Exchange. See HAWKE, supra note 22, at 2-3.

30. See SEC v. Tex. Gulf Sulfur Co., 401 F. 2d 833 (2d Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 976 (1969).

31. See SEC v. VTR, Inc., 410 F. Supp. 1309 (D.D.C. 1975).

before trading.[32] In VTR, the SEC persuaded a federal district court to approve as a remedy for the securities law violation the appointment of independent directors and to order restitution.[33] The VTR decision marked the beginning of a long series of civil cases obtaining ancillary relief in addition to an injunction against further misconduct.[34]

The growth in the number of actions being brought by the SEC sparked discussions, led by Chairman William J. Casey, about "concentrat[ing] resources by focusing all enforcement and investigative activity in one division."[35] In August 1972, the Commission reorganized the operating structure of its divisions by combining the enforcement programs of the divisions of Trading and Markets, Corporation Finance, and Investment Management into a newly created, stand-alone division.[36] The new "Division of Enforcement" would oversee all enforcement actions brought by the SEC.[37]

---

32. See Tex. Gulf Sulfur, 401 F. 2d at 848-52.

33. See VTR, Inc., 410 F. Supp. 1309.

34. SELIGMAN, supra note 29, at 362.

35. U.S. SEC. & EXCH. COMM'N, THIRTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION xxvii (1972), available at http://www.sec.gov/about/annual_report/1972.pdf. It has been suggested that this reorganization was initially resisted on the > belief that enforcement responsibility should not be separated from the divisions of the Commission that deal with substantive regulation. The belief was that as the regulators developed new principles of regulation, if enforcement became too separate from such development, it might reflect the uncertainties of the rules and the appropriate nature of regulation.

Symposium, Securities Law Enforcement Priorities, 17 SETON HALL LEGIS. J. 7, 9 (1993) (statement by Leonard M. Leiman).

36. HAWKE, supra note 22, at 3. In 1971, there were 40 lawyers in the enforcement group of the Division of Trading and Markets. Fowlkes, supra note 1, at 380. The Commission, on November 14, 2007, restored the name of the "Division of Market Regulation" to the "Division of Trading and Markets." See Press Release, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, SEC Renames Division of Market Regulation as Division of Trading and Markets (Nov. 14, 2007), available at http://www.sec.gov/news/press/2007/2007-229.htm. The Commission changed the name of the "Division of Corporate Regulation" to the "Division of Investment Management" in 1972. See Interview by Richard Rowe with Allan Mostoff (Oct. 30, 2002), available at http://www.sechistorical.org/collection/oralHistories/interviews/mostoff/mostoff100202Transcript.pdf.

37. HAWKE, supra note 22, at 3.

THE WELLS COMMISSION AND ITS RECOMMENDATIONS

On January 27, 1972, in a speech to the New York State Bar Association underscoring the importance of cooperation and collaboration between the Commission and the securities bar, Chairman Casey announced the creation of an advisory committee[38] to "review and evaluate the Commission's enforcement policies and practices and to make such recommendations as they deemed appropriate."[39] Chairman Casey called upon the private securities bar to contribute to improving the enforcement program by developing procedural safeguards to protect against abuses of the rights of prospective defendants.[40] Stressing the value of input from the private sector, Chairman Casey explained:

> [I] consider it essential for the Commission to redouble its efforts to keep in touch with the best thinking on investor protection at the private bar, in the accounting profession, and in the financial community generally. As one step — and I hope that it will prove a significant step — toward that end, I have created a special committee of three highly experienced practicing lawyers who will at my request examine the SEC's enforcement policy and practices, engage in frequent dialogue with the members of the Commission and with our staff, seek and sift the suggestions of the bar and make recommendations to the Commission for worthwhile improvements to our time-honored ways.[41]

Although the official name of the committee was the "Advisory Committee on Enforcement Policies and Practices," it is better known as the "Wells Committee" after its chairman, John A. Wells, a prominent lawyer and partner at the New York law firm of Royall, Koegel &

---

38. William J. Casey, Chairman, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, Address to the New York Bar Association (Jan. 27, 1972), available at http://www.sec.gov/news/speech/1972/012772casey.pdf [hereinafter Casey Speech].

39. U.S. SEC. & EXCH. COMM'N, REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ENFORCEMENT POLICIES AND PRACTICES (June 1, 1972), reprinted in ARTHUR F. MATHEWS ET AL., ENFORCEMENT AND LITIGATION UNDER THE FEDERAL SECURITIES LAWS 1973, at 275 (Practicing Law Institute 1973) [hereinafter WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT]; Memorandum from John A. Wells et al., Chairman, SEC Advisory Committee on Enforcement Policy and Practices (Mar. 2, 1972), available at http://www.sechistorical.org/collection/papers/1970/1972_0302_Casey.pdf [hereinafter Wells Memo].

40. Casey Speech, supra note 38, at 4-5.

41. Id.

Wells.[42] The Wells Committee also included former SEC chairmen Ralph H. Demmler and Manual F. Cohen, both of whom had taken an active interest in the workings of the enforcement program.[43] Howard G. Kristol, who served as special counsel to Chairman Casey, acted as a liaison to, and unofficial member of, the Wells Committee.[44]

The Wells Committee's stated mandate[45] was: first, "to advise on how the SEC's enforcement objectives and strategies may be made still more effective;"[46] second, to assess the due process implications of the enforcement practices;[47] third, to evaluate the enforcement policies and procedures;[48] fourth, "to make recommendations on the appropriate blend of regulation, publicity and formal enforcement action and on methods of furthering voluntary compliance;"[49] and fifth, "to make recommendations on criteria for the selection and disposition of enforcement actions and on the adequacy of . . . sanctions imposed in Commission proceedings."[50]

The Wells Committee was composed of three of the brightest minds of the securities bar, but the Committee did not conduct extensive, independent research and analysis. Instead, the Committee solicited comments from persons outside the Commission who were affected by the SEC's enforcement activities to "determine whether fairness could be more certainly assured, consistent with the need for effective enforcement."[51] The Wells Committee started its work in January 1972 and published a detailed report with forty-three recommendations for the Commission in June of the same year—an impressive achievement by any measure.[52] The report represented a candid and honest assessment of the enforcement program and reflected the substantial input the Committee received from the private bar.

---

42. Id. at 5-6. John Wells later formed a well-known law firm called Rogers & Wells.
43. Id.
44. Howard G. Kristol—Biography, available at http://www.duanemorris.com/attorneys/howardgkristol.html (last visited May 9, 2008).
45. Wells Memo, supra note 39.
46. Id. at 1.
47. Id.
48. Id.
49. Id. at 2.
50. Id.
51. WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT, supra note 39, at 3.
52. Id. at ii-viii.

The Wells Committee Recommendations

The most significant recommendations, from the perspective of a person defending against an SEC enforcement proceeding, are numbers 16, 17 and 20 of the report:[53]

> 16. Except where the nature of the case precludes, a prospective defendant or respondent should be notified of the substance of the staff's charges and probable recommendations in advance of the submission of the staff memorandum to the Commission recommending the commencement of an enforcement action and be accorded an opportunity to submit a written statement to the staff which would be forwarded to the Commission together with the staff memorandum.
>
> 17. The procedures whereby a prospective defendant or respondent is permitted to present to the Commission his side of the case prior to authorization of an enforcement action should be reflected in a rule or published release.
>
> * * *
>
> 20. The Commission should adopt procedures permitting discussions of settlement between the staff and the prospective defendant or respondent prior to the authorization of a proceeding.[54]

These three recommendations became the impetus for what is now known as the "Wells Submission."

Providing prospective defendants with notice of potential charges and allowing them to respond, as reflected in Recommendations 16 and 17, was not a novel concept within the walls of the SEC. Even prior to the report of the Wells Committee, the SEC, under Chairman Hamer Budge, had afforded prospective defendants an opportunity to be heard by the Commission. A September 1, 1970, internal directive of the Commission[55] required the Enforcement staff to include within its 53. Harvey L. Pitt et al., SEC Enforcement Process, Internationalization of the Securities Markets – Business Trends and Regulatory Policy, C489 ALI-ABA 109, 238 (1989).

54. WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT, supra note 39, at iv-v.

55. See Fowlkes, supra note 1 (describing the positions of the commissioners). It should be noted that this directive was supported by commissioners of both political parties.

memoranda recommending action by the Commission "any arguments or contentions as to either the facts or the law . . . which have [been] advanced by the prospective respondents and which countervail those made by the staff . . . ."[56] The purpose of the procedure was "to afford the Commission an opportunity to consider the position of the prospective defendant or respondent on any contested matters prior to authorization of a proceeding."[57]

The Wells Committee observed that "[a]s a practical matter, only experienced practitioners who are aware of the opportunity to present their client's side of the case have made use of [such] procedures."[58] The Committee felt that the process of providing notice to prospective defendants and allowing them to respond to the allegations before the Commission formally charged them was critical to protecting their rights and ensuring overall fairness.[59] The Committee recommended that the Commission codify the procedure through formal rulemaking.[60]

Unlike Recommendations 16 and 17, Recommendation 20 of the Wells Committee—to allow the staff to engage in preliminary settlement negotiations with a prospective defendant before the Commission authorized a proceeding[61]—was a significant departure from then-existing procedure. The 1970 internal directive required the staff to seek approval from the Commission to bring an action or proceeding prior to discussing its settlement.[62] Under the 1970 internal directive, the Enforcement staff could allow a defendant or respondent to present proposals and arguments prior to Commission authorization, so long as that person initiated the discussions.[63] The staff, however, was precluded from negotiating settlement terms or disclosing to the defendant or respondent the "recommendation it intend[ed] to make to the Commission."[64] This process, which itself represented a departure from prior procedure for negotiating settlements, grew out of a concern

56. This 1970 directive was made public solely as a result of pretrial discovery in SEC v. National Student Marketing Corporation. See SEC v. Nat'l Student Mktg. Corp., 68 F.R.D. 157, 166 appx. A (D.D.C. 1975) [hereinafter 1970 Internal Directive].

57. WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT, supra note 39, at 31.

58. Id. at 31-32.

59. Id.

60. Id. at 32.

61. WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT, supra note 39, at iv-v.

62. 1970 Internal Directive, supra note 56, at 165.

63. See id. The staff was permitted to discuss the facts and nature of the alleged violations. Id.

64. Id.

by the Commission that "its discretionary authority regarding the institution of proceedings [would be] substantially impaired."[65] According to Commissioner A. Sydney Herlong, the 1970 internal directive was designed to prevent the staff from "bludgeoning" companies into consent settlements by using the threat of public proceedings that might never be approved.[66] Commissioner Herlong, who was one of two Democrats on the Commission, explained:

> The staff sometimes is overly zealous and they sometimes want quick settlements to clear up their files. Sometimes they would beat people over the head for a consent decree. We had reports from some people who weren't pleased with the treatment.[67]

Responding to comment letters, the Wells Committee recommended that the Commission withdraw this mandate and return to the prior procedure of allowing staff leeway to negotiate settlements with prospective defendants prior to having the authority to commence an action or proceeding.[68] The Wells Committee believed that "frank discussions between the staff and opposing counsel concerning the staff's conclusions and probable recommendation to the Commission would encourage settlements."[69] To address concerns with abuse, the Committee proposed that the Director of Enforcement or a regional administrator be responsible for supervising settlement negotiations and that the proposed defendant or respondent be shown the evidence that the staff has assembled in support of its case.[70] As the Wells Committee observed, "When the staff refuses to disclose its evidence or the theory of its case to the respondent's attorney before the hearing, the attorney,

65. WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT, supra note 39, at 35. Philip A. Loomis, then general counsel of the SEC, explained that the Commission abandoned the practice of considering settlements negotiated without prior Commission authorization because the Commissioners felt hindered by a pre-decided result. See Fowlkes, supra note 1, at 381. Commissioner Richard B. Smith "offered essentially the same reason, saying that he missed the opportunity to hear industry's side of a case and that it struck him as bad administrative procedure." Id.

66. Fowlkes, supra note 1, at 381.

67. Id.

68. WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT, supra note 39, at 35.

69. Id.

70. Id. at 35-36.

not knowing what his client faces, may be unable or reluctant to recommend a settlement."[71]

The Wells Committee recommendation of a return to the pre-1970 procedure of allowing staff to negotiate settlements prior to Commission approval was met with favor by many members of the securities bar. In a May 23, 1972 letter to the Wells Committee concerning the proposed change, Arthur F. Mathews, a former SEC enforcement lawyer, wrote:

> [T]he changed enforcement policy has, although unintended, worked to the severe detriment of many defendants and prospective defendants who wish to achieve an acceptable consent settlement in lieu of litigation and who are not concerned that the Staff might "bludgeon" them. Rather, such persons usually are concerned with the continuing blasts of adverse publicity showering upon them, first by public institution of charges by the Commission, and later upon the conduct of a hearing or the announcement of the terms and conditions of a settlement subsequently negotiated. Such continuous publicity may be extremely unfair, particularly where serious allegations publicized upon institution of an action, are dropped subsequently by Staff and the Commission in accepting a consent settlement of the action.[72]

The notable aspect of this debate is that both sides were concerned with fairness and due process. Those in support of requiring Commission approval prior to settlement were concerned with the uneven negotiating position of the Commission's staff and the prospective defendant. Those in support of allowing informal settlement procedures prior to Commission approval believed that fairness would be advanced by limiting the time under which a prospective defendant could be exposed to adverse publicity. The ultimate conclusion of the Commission, however, emphasized the due process concerns of Commission oversight.

---

71. Id. at 37. Today, there are no specific guidelines concerning the amount and type of information that staff must share with a prospective defendant, so practices vary among the staff and across the regional offices.

72. Letter from Arthur F. Mathews of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering, to the Advisory Committee on Enforcement Policies and Practices 30 (May 23, 1972). Stanley Sporkin, then an associate director, agreed, stating that "it saved everybody a lot of bother and was welcomed by many of the people we regulate because it gave them a means of settling quickly." Fowlkes, supra note 1, at 381.

The Commission's Response to the Wells Recommendations

The recommendations of the Wells Committee were met with mixed responses within the agency. Although the private securities bar generally applauded the recommendations from the Wells Committee, the SEC staff disagreed with many of them, and the commissioners were reluctant to adopt formal rules.[73] With respect to Recommendations 16 and 17, the Commission "agree[d] that the objective [was] sound," but "concluded that it would not be in the public interest to adopt formal rules for that purpose."[74] The Commission apparently felt hamstrung by the mandatory-sounding nature of the phrase "except where the nature of the case precludes." The Commission believed that the formal adoption of the proposals "could seriously limit the scope and timeliness" of enforcement actions and inject issues "irrelevant to the merits."[75] As a result, the Commission indicated that, where "practical and appropriate," it would allow, on an informal basis, prospective defendants to provide written submissions before a charging decision was reached by the Commission.[76]

Although it did not immediately embrace Recommendations 16 and 17, the Commission eventually adopted the substance of these recommendations in procedural rules in November 1972, formulating today's Wells submission process. The process as adopted provided a proposed defendant or respondent with the opportunity to respond to charges.[77] The Commission notified the public of the opportunity for prospective defendants or respondents to "submit a written statement to the Commission setting forth their interests and positions in regard to the subject matter of the investigation."[78] SEC procedural rules directed the staff, in its discretion, to advise prospective defendants or respondents "of the general nature of its investigation, including the indicated violations as they pertain to them, and the amount of time that may be available for preparing and submitting a statement prior to the

73. See Pitt et al., supra note 53, at 63.

74. Procedures Relating to the Commencement of Enforcement Proceedings and Termination of Staff Investigation, Securities Act Release No. 5310, [1972-1973 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 79,010, at 82,183-86 (Sept. 22, 1972) (emphasis added) [hereinafter SEC Release No. 5310].

75. Id. at 2.

76. Stephen A. Glasser, SEC Adopts Rules Changes in Areas of Enforcement, N.Y.L.J., Sept. 29, 1972.

77. See 37 Fed. Reg. 23,829 (Nov. 9, 1972) (codified at 17 C.F.R. § 202.5(c)).

78. 17 C.F.R. § 202.5(c) (2006).

presentation of a staff recommendation to the Commission for the commencement of an administrative or injunctive proceeding."[79] The Commission, however, explained that a prospective defendant's opportunity to submit a response was not absolute, and the Commission expressly reserved the right to take any action while awaiting a submission by a proposed defendant or respondent.[80]

The Commission rejected Recommendation 20 of the Wells Committee, which would have permitted settlement discussions prior to authorization from the Commission to commence an action or proceeding.[81] Apparently, the Commission continued to harbor concerns that its discretionary authority regarding the institution of proceedings would be substantially impaired.[82] Irving Pollack, then director of the Division of Enforcement, explained the reason for rejecting the recommendation as two-fold: first, it would be difficult for the Commission to reject a settlement already reached between staff and a prospective defendant; second, there was concern that settlement discussions prior to Commission approval would give the staff the leverage to threaten prospective defendants into submission.[83] Therefore, the procedure described in the 1970 internal directive of requiring the staff to seek Commission approval to bring an action prior to negotiating settlement of it remained in effect.

In 1979, the Commission, under Chairman Harold Williams,[84] formally adopted in the SEC procedural rules the requirement that the enforcement staff must have Commission authorization before engaging in settlement discussions.[85] The Commission reasoned that its involvement in settlement discussions was critical to ensuring a fair process and to protecting the rights of defendants.[86]

---

79. Id.
80. See SEC Release No. 5310, supra note 74, at 2.
81. WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT, supra note 39, at 34.
82. Id. at 35.
83. Glasser, supra note 76.
84. Harold M. Williams—Biography, http://skadden.com/index.cfm?contentID=45&bioID=848 (last visited May 8, 2008). During his tenure, Chairman Williams increased the Office of the General Counsel from approximately a dozen attorneys to more than forty attorneys as an alternative source of advice to the Commission on issues such as enforcement matters.
85. See 17 C.F.R. § 202.5(f) (2006).
86. John M. Fedders, Dir., Div. of Enforcement, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, Remarks to the 1981 SEC Accounting Conference Foundation for Accounting

Although the Commission did not adopt all of the forty-three specific recommendations, the most obvious legacy of the Wells Committee was the adoption of the "Wells Process," a process whereby prospective defendants or respondents are afforded an opportunity to submit a writing—essentially a brief—to the Commission and its staff after the staff's investigation is completed, but before the staff has made a recommendation to the Commission. Under this procedure, a prospective defendant or respondent enjoys due process—a hallmark of our Anglo-American judicial system.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM AND ITS PHILOSOPHY

Prior to 1990, the SEC's statutory purpose for enforcing the securities laws was to provide remedial relief for aggrieved investors and to deter future violations.[87] The enforcement program began by serving primarily a remedial purpose, through the Commission's injunctive powers and the disgorgement remedies that the Commission fashioned.[88] In the decades following the Wells Committee, the Commission's enforcement actions began to shift from remedial to punitive in nature. This shift of emphasis arose from the new powers that Congress gave the SEC, such as the authority to impose officer and director bars, penalties against individuals and registered entities, and censures in administrative actions.

In 1984, the SEC staff, in response to a congressional request, prepared a review of the adequacy of enforcement sanctions and remedies.[89] The resulting report stated that "[t]he federal securities laws are presently viewed by the courts as remedial rather than punitive" and

---

Education: New York State Society of Certified Public Accountants 3-6 (Nov. 16, 1981).

87. See, e.g., Memorandum from John S.R. Shad, Chairman, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, to Rep. Timothy E. Wirth, Chairman, Subcomm. Telecomms., Consumer Prot., & Fin. of the H. Energy and Commerce Comm. 350 (Feb. 22, 1984) [hereinafter Memorandum to Chairman Wirth].

88. See, e.g., SEC v. Manor Nursing Ctrs., Inc., 458 F.2d 1082, 1104 (2d Cir. 1972) ("The deterrent effect of an SEC enforcement action would be greatly undermined if securities law violators were not required to disgorge illegal profits."); SEC v. Commonwealth Chem. Sec., Inc., 574 F.2d 90, 102 (2d Cir. 1978) ("[T]he primary purpose of disgorgement is not to compensate investors. . . . [I]t is a method of forcing a defendant to give up the amount by which he was unjustly enriched.").

89. See Memorandum to Chairman Wirth, supra note 87 (transmitting "Results of the Review of the Adequacy of Enforcement Remedies and Sanctions").

that the SEC's non-monetary remedies were "effective in most cases" in providing that remedial relief.[90] The staff reported that, aside from the area of insider trading, which Congress was addressing at the time,[91] "the Commission has been unable to identify a serious need for additional remedies to deter a specific type of conduct."[92]

The report asserted that "the advantages of seeking additional civil penalties appear to be marginal" and "must be balanced against a number of potentially serious disadvantages."[93] Chief among those identified disadvantages was the concern that giving the SEC the authority to seek or impose civil monetary penalties for violations of the federal securities laws would "change the character of the enforcement program from remedial to punitive, [and] might lead the judiciary to be less receptive to the SEC's injunctive actions."[94] Traditionally, the Commission relied on the Department of Justice to exercise these remedies through its criminal authority.[95]

By the late 1980s, these philosophical views substantially changed. In a memorandum in support of the Securities Enforcement Act of 1989, the Commission stated that "variable-penalty provisions are appropriate to penalize and deter the broad range of conduct for which these penalties will be assessed."[96] The Commission conceded that moving to remedies that were more punitive in nature could result in one of two things: increased difficulty in obtaining settlements as a result of defendants' unwillingness to settle cases involving large civil penalties, thereby potentially harming aggrieved investors, or a greater likelihood of settlement by defendants hoping to avoid much larger civil monetary penalties after litigation.[97] The Commission's asserted need in 1990 to penalize a broad range of conduct was a significant departure from its

---

90. Id.

91. Congress was considering proposed legislation that eventually became the Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984. See Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-376, § 1, 98 Stat. 1264 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 15 U.S.C.).

92. Memorandum to Chairman Wirth, supra note 87, at 350.

93. Id.

94. Id.

95. Id.

96. U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, Memorandum of the Securities and Exchange Commission in Support of the Securities Law Enforcement Remedies Act of 1989, reprinted in H.R. No. 975, 101st Cong., at 7 (emphasis added) [hereinafter SEC Memorandum in Support of Remedies Act].

97. Memorandum to Chairman Wirth, supra note 87, at 350-51.

representation to Congress only six years earlier that its existing remedies were effective.[98]

In 1990, former Director of Enforcement Gary Lynch, who had recently left the SEC, testified before the Senate Subcommittee on Securities. Although he testified in favor of providing additional penalty powers to the Commission, he cautioned:

> I think it is important for the Commission to maintain its historical focus on achieving remedial relief, rather than taking punitive action in every case, and that the Commission should still continue to judge the effectiveness of the Commission's enforcement program based on what it actually accomplishes, as opposed to what the dollar amount is that is ordered in a particular case.[99]

Congress provided the SEC with enhanced enforcement remedies, including expanded remedial powers and new penalty authority. These powers were included in the Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984,[100] the Insider Trading and Securities Fraud Enforcement Act of 1988,[101] and the Securities and Enforcement Remedies and Penny Stock Reform Act of 1990.[102]

As a result of these laws, the SEC gained three significant new sets of powers: (1) the ability to seek civil monetary penalties against persons and entities that may have violated federal securities laws; (2) the authority to bar directors and officers of public companies from serving in those capacities if they violated federal antifraud provisions; and (3) the authority to issue administrative cease-and-desist orders, temporary restraining orders, and orders for disgorgement of ill-gotten profits to violators of federal securities laws. These significant powers and laws enabling them are discussed in more detail below.

---

98. Id. at 350.

99. The Securities Enforcement Remedies Act of 1989: Hearing Before the Sec. Subcomm. of the S. Banking, Hous., & Urban Affairs Comm. (Feb. 1, 1990) (statement of Gary G. Lynch, Fmr. Dir., Div. of Enforcement, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n).

100. Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-376, § 1, 98 Stat. 1264 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 15 U.S.C.).

101. Insider Trading and Securities Fraud Enforcement Act of 1988, Pub. L. No. 100-704, § 1, 102 Stat. 4677 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 15 U.S.C.).

102. Securities Enforcement Remedies and Penny Stock Reform Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-429, 104 Stat. 931 (1990).

The Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984

In connection with its enhanced enforcement efforts with respect to insider trading,[103] the SEC submitted proposed legislation to Congress on September 27, 1982, that would authorize the SEC to seek (and a United States District Court to impose) civil monetary penalties of up to three times the profit realized or loss avoided in insider trading cases.[104] At the time of the proposal, the SEC's primary weapons "against insider trading [were] injunction[s] requiring a defendant to comply with the law in the future, and ancillary equitable relief in the form of disgorgement of illegal profits."[105] Previously, the power to seek "penalties" in the form of prison sentences, criminal fines and restitution resided solely in the Department of Justice ("DOJ") and state authorities.

As a result of the growing number of insider trading cases, the Commission believed that its existing tools of injunctions and disgorgement were inadequate to deter persons from trading on material, nonpublic information. Injunctions, the Commission explained, merely order a defendant prospectively to comply with existing law, and do "not penalize the defendant for the illegal conduct for which the injunction was imposed."[106] The Commission viewed the remedy of disgorgement as likewise inadequate because it merely "strips the defendant of the fruits of his unlawful trading and returns him to the position he was in before he broke the law."[107] Apparently discounting the possible criminal sanctions and the reputational harm associated with injunctive and ancillary relief, the Commission explained to Congress, "[A]n insider who is caught improperly profiting from the use of material information is placed in no worse a position than the honest man who refuses to act."[108]

---

103. U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, Memorandum of the Securities and Exchange Commission in Support of the Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1982, reprinted in H.R. REP. No. 98-355, 98th Cong., at 18 (1984), and in 1984 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2274, 2293 [hereinafter SEC Memorandum in Support of Insider Trading Sanction Act].

104. Letter from John Shad, Chairman, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, to Hon. Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., with accompanying memorandum (Sept. 27, 1982), reprinted in H.R. REP. No. 98-355, 98th Cong., at 18 (1984), and in 1984 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2274, 2292.

105. SEC Memorandum in Support of Insider Trading Sanction Act, supra note 103, at 24.

106. Id.

107. Id.

108. Id. (quoting HARVEY J. GOLDSCHMID, REPORT FOR THE U.S. ADMINISTRATIVE CONFERENCE: AN EVALUATION OF THE PRESIDENT AND POTENTIAL USE OF CIVIL

In response, Congress passed the Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984 ("ITSA"), which was signed into law on August 10, 1984. ITSA authorized treble damages in insider trading cases[109] and increased the maximum criminal fine for Exchange Act violations to $100,000.[110] ITSA was the first significant legislation that provided the SEC with the authority to penalize, and it was premised on the Commission's limited belief that penalties in the form of monetary sanctions were necessary to deter the specific securities law violation of insider trading.[111] At that time, the Commission believed that existing remedies were effective against other securities law violations.

Insider Trading and Securities Fraud Enforcement Act of 1988

After the passage of ITSA, Congress continued to evaluate whether the legislation was sufficient to deter insider trading.[112] In the mid-1980s, insider-trading scandals dominated the financial news and involved such high-profile Wall Street traders as Ivan Boesky, Michael Milken, and Dennis Levine.[113] Insider trading became the focus of Congressional hearings in June and July 1986 and continued to be the focus of hearings for the next several years.[114]

In 1988, members of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce introduced additional legislation "[a]fter learning of an increasing number of serious insider trading cases."[115] The new

---

MONEY PENALTIES AS A SANCTION BY THE FEDERAL ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES 36 (1972)).

109. See Insider Trading Sanctions Act of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-376, § 2, 98 Stat. 1264 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 15 U.S.C.).

110. See id. § 3. Previously, the maximum criminal fine for Exchange Act violations was $10,000. Id.

111. See Memorandum to Chairman Wirth, supra note 87 (transmitting "Results of the Review of the Adequacy of Enforcement Remedies and Sanctions").

112. See Thomas J. Woo, Legislation and Legitimation: Congress and Insider Trading in the 1980s (The Berkeley Electronic Press, Working Paper No. 941, 2006), available at http://law.bepress.com/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=4566&context=expresso.

113. Id. at 7.

114. Id.

115. Stuart J. Kaswell, An Insider's View of the Insider Trading and Securities Fraud Enforcement Act of 1988, 45 BUS. LAW. 145 (1989); see also H.R. REP. No. 100-910, 100th Cong., at 7 (1988), reprinted in 1988 U.S.C.C.A.N. 6043, 6044 ("The Insider Trading and Securities Fraud Enforcement Act of 1988 represents the response of [the House Committee on Energy and Commerce] to a series of revelations over the legislation, the Insider Trading and Securities Fraud Enforcement Act of 1988 ("ITSFEA"), was prompted by an "unstated premise that broker-dealers in particular, and others in general, were not doing enough to detect and deter insider trading."[116]

Congress passed ITSFEA and President Reagan signed it into law in November 1988. The new law extended the SEC's authority to impose penalties on persons who control a person who trades on material nonpublic information in violation of the law,[117] and it required broker-dealers and investment advisers to "establish, maintain, and enforce written policies and procedures reasonably designed . . . to prevent the misuse . . . of material, nonpublic information."[118] ITSFEA extended the DOJ's criminal authority by: (1) increasing maximum criminal fines for Exchange Act violations to $1,000,000 for individuals and $2,500,000 for non-natural persons;[119] (2) increasing the maximum duration of imprisonment to ten years;[120] and (3) authorizing the payment of a reward to those "persons who provide information leading to the imposition of [a] penalty."[121] ITSFEA also vested private plaintiffs with authority to assist in the deterrence effort by creating an express private right of action against insiders who trade on material nonpublic information.[122]

The Securities Enforcement Remedies and Penny Stock Reform Act of 1990

In October 1987, prior to the passage of the ITSFEA, the National Commission on Fraudulent Financial Reporting—dubbed the "Treadway Commission" after its chairman, former SEC Commissioner James C. Treadway, Jr.—published a comprehensive report that identified causes of financial reporting fraud and issued recommendations for their last two years concerning serious episodes of abusive and illegal practices on Wall Street.").

---

116. Kaswell, supra note 115, at 156.

117. Insider Trading and Securities Fraud Enforcement Act of 1988, Pub. L. No. 100-704, § 3, 102 Stat. 4677 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 15 U.S.C). The penalty authorized for such control persons could not exceed the greater of three times the profit realized or loss avoided or $1,000,000. Id.

118. Id.

119. Id. § 4.

120. Id.

121. Id. § 3.

122. Id. § 5.

reduction.[123] The Treadway Commission Report recommended the creation of additional SEC enforcement remedies, namely the imposition of fines outside the limited context of insider trading cases, cease-and-desist orders and corporate officer and director bars or suspensions.[124] The stated purpose of these proposals was to afford the Commission "[t]he ability to tailor enforcement actions more precisely to particular facts[,] [thereby] enabl[ing] the SEC to maximize its enforcement effectiveness."[125] In response to the Treadway Commission Report, the chairman directed the staff to develop legislative recommendations in response to the conclusions of the Treadway Commission.[126]

Although the House Committee on Energy and Commerce anticipated taking up the SEC's legislative proposals in response to the Treadway Commission at the same time the House Committee considered ITSFEA,[127] the SEC was unable to complete its proposals in time for inclusion in that legislation.[128] To prompt the SEC to submit additional legislative proposals, Congress added section 3(c) to ITSFEA, which directed the Commission to submit to Congress "any recommendations the Commission considers appropriate with respect to the extension of the Commission's authority to seek civil penalties or impose administrative fines."[129]

After ITSFEA was passed, but before it was signed into law, the Commission submitted to Congress its first recommended legislative response to the recommendations of the Treadway Commission.[130] The Commission initially asked for the authority to seek civil penalties in all administrative proceedings, including in proceedings against issuers under explicit, limited circumstances.

In a memorandum to Congress, the Commission, under Chairman David Ruder, set forth the factors that should be considered in determining whether to seek a civil penalty against an issuer in an

123. See NAT'L COMM'N ON FRAUDULENT FIN. REPORTING, REPORT OF THE NATIONAL COMMISSION ON FRAUDULENT FINANCIAL REPORTING (1987), available at http://www.coso.org/Publications/NCFFR.pdf.

124. See id. at 64-67.

125. Id. at 64.

126. Kaswell, supra note 115, at 171.

127. Id.

128. Id.

129. Insider Trading and Securities Fraud Enforcement Act § 3.

130. See H.R. REP. No. 101-616, 101th Cong., at 15 (1990), reprinted in 1990 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1379.

administrative proceeding.[131] First, the SEC underscored that the proposed law would not "dictate" that the Commission must seek or impose a civil penalty against an issuer.[132] Instead, as the Commission explained, the Commission could proceed against culpable individuals and exercise discretion in not seeking an issuer penalty.[133] Second, the Commission stressed that it "may properly take into account its concern that civil penalties assessed against corporate issuers will ultimately be paid by shareholders who were themselves victimized by the violations."[134] The Commission explained that penalties should be assessed against issuers only in the rare situation where the issuer received a "direct economic benefit" from the fraud:

> In a typical case of financial fraud in which a[n] issuer overstates it[s] earnings and revenues, for example, the only shareholders who reap a direct economic benefit are those who sell their shares at an inflated price before the fraud is exposed. By the time that an enforcement action is brought, a large percentage of the shareholders may consist of persons who purchased shares at a price that was artificially inflated as a result of the fraud. To assess a civil penalty in such a case against the issuer, as opposed to the individual officers who were responsible for the fraud, would appear to be inequitable.[135]

The Commission further elaborated in a footnote on the limited instances where shareholders of a company might have received a direct economic benefit from fraud:

> The lack of a direct economic benefit to shareholders differentiates financial fraud from other types of violations for which public companies may be fined under other statutes. For example, if a corporation violates environmental standards relating to emissions control, it generally realizes a cost saving that is ultimately realized by shareholders.[136]

Third, the Commission stated that a civil penalty should be imposed on an issuer "only where the violation resulted in an improper benefit to

131. SEC Memorandum in Support of Insider Trading Sanction Act, supra note 103, at 4.

132. Id.

133. Id.

134. Id.

135. Id. (emphasis added).

136. Id. at 4 n.5

shareholders," but that, even under those circumstances, the passage of time and resulting shareholder turnover may weigh against imposing a penalty.[137]

Central to the Commission's analysis of the propriety of seeking a penalty against an individual or an issuer was whether the penalty would serve a "public interest."[138] To that point, the Commission outlined several additional factors it would consider to determine if the penalty was in the public interest:

- whether the act or omission for which such penalty is assessed involved fraud, deceit, manipulation, or deliberate or reckless disregard of a regulatory requirement;
- the harm to other persons resulting either directly or indirectly from such act or omission;
- the extent to which any person was unjustly enriched, taking into account any restitution made to persons injured by such behavior;[139]
- whether such person previously has been found by the Commission, other appropriate regulatory agency, or self-regulatory organization to have violated the federal securities laws, state securities laws, or the rules of a self-regulatory organization, or has been enjoined by a court of competent jurisdiction from violations of such laws or rules;
- the need to deter such person and other persons from committing such acts or omissions; and
- such other matters as justice may require.[140]

In its February 1, 1990, "modified proposal" to Congress, the Commission removed its request for the authority to seek civil monetary

137. Id. at 5.

138. Id. at 9.

139. Id. (emphasis added); compare Press Release, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, Statement of the Securities and Exchange Commission Concerning Financial Penalties (Jan. 4, 2006) (omitting this clause), available at http://www.sec.gov/news/press/2006-4.htm.

140. SEC Memorandum in Support of Insider Trading Sanction Act, supra note 103, at 9.

penalties against issuers in administrative proceedings.[141] The Commission also removed its prior request for authority to impose officer and director bars in administrative proceedings.[142] The modified proposal added provisions that expressly authorized the SEC to issue cease-and-desist orders and to order disgorgement in administrative proceedings, and allowed federal courts to bar persons from serving as directors or officers.[143] The Commission's "modified proposal" eventually became law through the "the Securities Enforcement Remedies and Penny Stock Reform Act of 1990," commonly referred to as "The Remedies Act."

As enacted, the Remedies Act significantly expanded the permissible enforcement remedies the Commission may seek in civil proceedings or impose in administrative proceedings.[144] The Remedies Act formulated a three-tiered penalty framework, which sets forth the amount of a fine based on the number and nature of violations.[145] At each tier, the fine may not exceed the higher of the gross pecuniary gain or the maximum statutory amount.[146] This variable penalty framework was not in the original draft of the Remedies Act but was later included to reflect the Commission's belief that variable penalties would aid in 141. See The Securities Law Enforcement Act of 1990: Hearings on S. 647 Before the S. Subcomm. on Sec., 101st Cong. 31 (1990) (statement by Richard C. Breeden, Chairman, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n).

---

142. Id.

143. Id.

144. For a general discussion of each class of remedies created by the Remedies Act, see Richard A. Spehr & Michelle J. Annunziata, The Remedies Act Turns Fifteen: What is its Relevance Today?, 1 N.Y.U J. L. & BUS. 587, 589-95 (2005).

145. See The Securities Law Enforcement Remedies Act of 1990, S. REP. No. 101-337, 101st Cong. (1990). Originally, there were three tiers of maximum penalty amounts separated according to the gravity and extent of harm caused by the violation, and each penalty is per violation. For SEC administrative proceedings, the first tier penalty was $5,000 for natural citizens and $50,000 for any other person. The second tier maximum penalty was $50,000 for natural persons and $250,000 for any other person and applies to violations involving fraud, deceit, manipulation or deliberate or reckless disregard of a regulatory requirement. The third-tier penalty for natural persons was $100,000 and $500,000 for any other person and applies to violations that either resulted in substantial losses to other persons or created the risk of such losses. These amounts have been increased by subsequent regulation. See 17 C.F.R. 201.1001, et seq. (citing the Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996).

146. See id.

tailoring the size of the penalty to fit the circumstances of individual cases.[147]

The Remedies Act further gave the SEC the power to seek (and an administrative law judge to impose) civil penalties through administrative proceedings against specified persons and entities directly regulated by the Commission, such as broker-dealers and investment advisors, when a penalty would be in the "public interest."[148] The Remedies Act also gave the SEC the power to seek civil monetary penalties against issuers, but only in federal court proceedings. Although Congress understood that imposing civil monetary penalties on issuers would harm shareholders,[149] Congress expected that the SEC would exercise discretion and seek civil monetary penalties against issuers only when a violation resulted in improper benefits to shareholders.[150]

Congress took comfort in the fact that federal judges would operate as an independent check to the Commission's decision to seek an issuer penalty and the amount sought to be recovered. The concern among members of Congress and internally at the SEC was that if the same remedies were available to the SEC under both judicial and administrative proceedings, then the SEC might be perceived to have an incentive to conduct more enforcement actions through its own

---

147. See SEC Memorandum in Support of Insider Trading Sanction Act, supra note 103, at 49; see also S. REP. No. 101-337, 101st Cong. (1990)

148. See Securities Enforcement Remedies and Penny Stock Reform Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-429, § 202, 104 Stat. 931 (1990) (for certain Exchange Act violations); id. § 301 (for certain Investment Company Act violations); id. § 402 (for certain Advisers Act violations).

149. See The Securities Law Enforcement Remedies Act of 1990: Hearings on S. 647 Before the S. Subcomm. on Sec., 101st Cong. 85 (1990) (statement by Sen. John Heinz) ("Doesn't the imposition of a fine against a publicly held company penalize the shareholder?").

150. See S. REP No. 101-337, 101st Cong. 16-17 (1990). Echoing the Commission's intent, the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs stated that it > intends that a penalty be sought when the violation results in an improper benefit to shareholders. In cases in which shareholders are the principal victims of the violations, the Committee expects that the SEC, when appropriate, will seek penalties from the individual offenders acting for a corporate issuer. Moreover, in deciding whether and to what extent to assess a penalty against the issuer, the court may properly take into account whether civil penalties assessed against corporate issue[r]s will ultimately be paid by shareholders who were themselves victimized by the violations.

Id. at 17.

administrative proceedings, rather than before a federal district court judge. The final legislation did not include penalty authority in administrative proceedings precisely because there would be no oversight by Article III judges as there would be in civil proceedings. In practice, however, public companies seldom choose to litigate with the SEC, and settled injunctive actions rarely receive any detailed judicial scrutiny. To guarantee the safeguards that normally accompany a judicial determination of a penalty, commissioners must exercise sufficient, policy-level scrutiny, such as the "public interest" analysis described above, in evaluating a penalty recommendation.[151]

After the Remedies Act was signed into law in 1990 and before the SEC's April 2002 Xerox case,[152] the Commission brought only four issuer-penalty cases, totaling less than $5 million.[153] The Xerox case, in which the company paid a $10 million penalty, is viewed by many as the beginning of the "corporate penalty era" at the Commission. Between the Xerox case and the date this Article was written, the Commission has imposed penalties against approximately sixty issuers, totaling billions of dollars.

THE CORPORATE SCANDALS AT THE BEGINNING OF THE 21ST CENTURY

In the first years of this century, the investing public was scarred by major corporate scandals leading to the demise of several large companies such as Enron Corp.[154] and WorldCom Inc.[155] that were

---

151. In January 2006, the Commission issued a statement outlining the parameters under which it would consider seeking penalties against issuers. See infra, text accompanying notes 178-181.

152. Xerox Corp., Litigation Release No. 17465, 77 SEC Docket 971, 2002 WL 535379 (Apr. 11, 2002).

153. There were large penalties against registered entities during this period. See, e.g., Press Release, Department of Justice and SEC Enter $290 Million Settlement with Solomon Brothers in Treasury Securities Case, available at http://www.usdoj.gov/atr/public/press_releases/1992/211182.htm. These penalties are not discussed in this Article because they were levied against registered entities for defrauding their customers or the market, as opposed to defrauding their shareholders.

154. At the time that it declared bankruptcy in 2001, Enron was the seventh largest company on the Fortune 500 list by revenues. See Matt Moore, Bankrupt Enron No. 5 in Fortune 500 List, HOUSTON CHRONICLE, Apr. 4, 2002, available at http://www.chron.com/disp/story.mpl/special/enron/1327642.html.

155. Until the financial problems of WorldCom became acute in spring 2002, the bills under consideration in the Senate and House were not given much chance of passage. See Peter J. Wallison, Sarbanes-Oxley as an Inside-the-Beltway Phenomenon, viewed previously as paragons of industry. Congress reacted to the new spate of corporate scandals in the same way that it did in response to the insider trading scandals of the 1980s—it provided the SEC with significant authority to enforce new and existing laws.[156] The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 imposed significant, additional requirements on corporations and their officers and directors.[157] The Sarbanes-Oxley Act greatly expanded the Commission's enforcement powers and the criminal penalties for violating the federal securities laws.[158]

Section 1105 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act permits the SEC to obtain officer and director bars in administrative proceedings, and section 305(a) amended 15 U.S.C. § 78u(d)(2) and 15 U.S.C. § 77t(e) by lowering the standard for obtaining a bar from "substantially unfit" to "unfit." Prior to the adoption of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, an officer and director bar was available only in civil injunctive actions after a showing that the officer or director was "substantially unfit" to serve in the position.[159]

Section 308(a) of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act contained a novel "Fair Funds" provision that allows the Commission to disperse the penalties obtained from wrongdoers to compensate harmed shareholders.[160] Section 308 had no counterpart in the Senate bill, because it was added

---

AMERICAN ENTER. INST. FOR PUB. POLICY RESEARCH, June 2004, at 2, available at http://www.aei.org/publications/pubID.20582/pub_detail.asp. The collapse of WorldCom, relatively close to the 2002 congressional election, which both political parties acknowledged as a rematch of the very close presidential election of 2000, led to the eventual enactment of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act, with only three votes against it in the entire Congress. Some in Washington dubbed the Sarbanes-Oxley Act the "Bernie Ebbers Memorial Act" after the then-CEO of WorldCom.

156. In the intervening years following the Remedies Act, Congress did not adjust the SEC's enforcement authority to any great extent. The principal exception was the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995 §104, Pub. L. No. 104-67, 109 Stat. 737 (1995) (codified at 15 U.S.C. 78t(e)). The PSLRA amended the securities laws to allow the SEC to bring actions against secondary violators that aid and abet securities law violations. Congress wisely declined to extend that right to private parties, out of concern over abusive securities litigation.

157. Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-204, 116 Stat. 745 (codified in scattered sections of 11, 15, 18, 28, and 29 U.S.C.).

158. The changes relevant to this Article are discussed below. The Sarbanes-Oxley Act included other provisions that are not discussed here.

159. Sarbanes-Oxley Act § 1105, 15 U.S.C. 7246 (2006).

160. Id. § 308(a).

during the conference process.[161] Accordingly, the Senate Banking Committee report does not discuss this provision.

Prior to Section 308(a), the Commission was permitted to remit amounts obtained in actions as disgorgement to injured investors, but was required to remit any penalties it received to the U.S. Treasury. Section 308(a) provided flexibility to the Commission to distribute both disgorgement and penalties through a Fair Fund, but the penalties cannot be dispersed absent disgorgement of ill-gotten gains.[162] Congress, joined by the Justice Department, wanted to avoid having penalties become a substitute for disgorgement. Disgorgement is the forfeiture of the ill-gotten gains received by the defendant; it is not inherently a mechanism to recompense aggrieved investors. By making disgorgement a prerequisite for adding penalties to the Fair Fund, Congress focused on depriving the defendant of its ill-gotten gains, not necessarily punishing wrongdoers.[163] Congress also may have been concerned with a possible windfall to investors if the defendant did not receive any ill-gotten gain from the wrongdoing.

Congress also required the SEC to study ways to improve the Fair Funds process. Section 308(c) of Sarbanes-Oxley instructed the SEC to review and analyze enforcement actions over the course of the five years prior to enactment "to identify areas where such proceedings may be utilized to efficiently, effectively, and fairly provide restitution for injured investors . . . including methods to improve the collection rates

---

161. See Press Release, Baker Proposes New Federal Investor Restitution Fund (July 17, 2002), available at http://web.archive.org/web/20031108035021/www.baker.house.gov/News/fair_fund.htm [hereinafter Baker I].

162. See Sarbanes-Oxley Act § 308(a). Within the first six months of having the authority, the Commission sought federal court approval of Fair Fund distributions on at least 12 occasions. Stephen Cutler, Dir. of Enforcement, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, Testimony Concerning Returning Funds to Defrauded Investors Before the H. Subcomm. on Capital Mkts., Ins., & Gov't Sponsored Enters., Comm. on Fin. Servs. 10 (Feb. 26, 2003) available at http://www.sec.gov/news/testimony/022603tssmc.htm [hereinafter Cutler Testimony].

163. See Press Release, Baker Statement to Open House-Senate Conference on Corporate Reform (July 19, 2002), available at http://web.archive.org/web/20030906035258/www.baker.house.gov/News/conf_corprfm.htm.

> How is it possible for anyone to sit idly by while watching a corporate official move into his $20 million mansion, with hundreds of millions of dollars in retirement benefits, having generated this lifestyle by manipulating the books and defrauding shareholders? With the adoption of the FAIR plan, we will make this much less likely to occur and offer the hope to investors for a small reduction in their loss.

Id.; see also Baker I, supra note 161.

for civil penalties and disgorgements."[164] Section 308(c) instructed the SEC to provide a report to Congress within 180 days of the enactment of the Act that included "a discussion of regulatory or legislative actions" that the SEC recommended or "that may be necessary to address concerns identified in the study."[165]

In response to Section 308(c), the Commission submitted a report to Congress on January 23, 2003.[166] In its report, the Commission described the limitations of the requirement in Section 308(a) for the SEC to obtain disgorgement before adding the penalty amount to the Fair Fund:

> Currently, the Fair Fund provision permits the Commission to add penalty money to distribution funds in limited circumstances. If a defendant is ordered only to pay a penalty, then that defendant's penalty amount cannot be added to the disgorgement fund. Moreover, if no defendants in a case are ordered to pay disgorgement, then no penalties may be distributed to injured investors. Some issuer financial fraud and reporting cases do not result in any disgorgement orders because no defendant received a tangible profit causally connected to the fraud.[167]

To alleviate these restrictions, the Commission recommended that Congress amend Section 308 to permit the penalties to be added to the Fair Funds even when no disgorgement is obtained. The Commission's report stated:

> By amending the Fair Fund provision to allow defendants' penalties to be distributed to investors irrespective of whether the defendant has been ordered to disgorge money, Congress could allow more monies to be returned to harmed investors.[168]

---

164. Sarbanes-Oxley Act § 308(c).

165. Id.

166. See U.S. SEC. & EXCH. COMM'N, REPORT PURSUANT TO SECTION 308(C) OF THE SARBANES OXLEY ACT OF 2002, available at http://www.sec.gov/news/studies/sox308c report.pdf.

167. Id. at 34.

168. Id.; see also Cutler Testimony, supra note 162.

> [I]t would be beneficial if the Commission could distribute penalties collected from these defendants (as well as from defendants who are paying disgorgement) to harmed investors in that case . . . . We recommend making technical amendments to the Fair Fund provision to permit the Commission to use penalty moneys for distribution funds in these additional circumstances.

Id.

In response to the Commission's request, Chairman Richard Baker of the Subcommittee on Capital Markets, Insurance, and Government-Sponsored Enterprises of the House Financial Services Committee introduced legislation in 2003 and 2006 to permit any penalty monies obtaining by the Commission to be added to a Fair Fund for the benefit of victims of the securities law violation.[169] Neither bill passed Congress.[170]

Proponents of corporate penalties argue that the Fair Funds provision of the Section 308 of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act alleviates the earlier concerns raised by the Commission in 1989 and Congress in 1990 about harm to shareholders, because any penalties collected are distributed to shareholders. This argument is premised on flawed, circular reasoning. When the Commission obtains penalties from a corporation, there is always one group of shareholders that must pay. The Commission is taking from one group of shareholders to recompense another.[171] Whatever its characterization, ultimately the costs of making this circular distribution are borne by shareholders.

There is no doubt that Section 308 was rooted in good intentions of attempting to help defrauded shareholders. Unfortunately, it has injected an element of uncertainty because penalties are inherently subjective, while disgorgement is rooted in the notion of illicit gain, which generally is quantifiable. In many instances, the SEC has avoided—some argue circumvented—the requirements of Section 308 by assessing a "nominal" disgorgement amount of $1 in order to obtain the "hook" to justify seeking a large corporate penalty to put into a Fair Fund for distribution.[172] As a result, the Fair Fund provision, which was 169. See Fair Fund Improvement Act, H.R. 5956, 109th Cong. (2006); Securities Fraud Deterrence and Investor Restitution Act of 2004, H.R. 2179, 108th Cong. (2004); Dissenting Views to Accompany H.R. 2179, H.R. REP. No. 108-475 (Apr. 27, 2004); see also Press Release, Baker, Oxley Introduce Bill To Strengthen SEC Powers Against Securities Fraud, Return Funds To Defrauded Investors (May 21, 2003), available at http://web.archive.org/web/20030602 192406/www.baker.house.gov/News/fair_bill.htm.

---

170. The bills did not advance in Congress because of the general unwillingness to re-open the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002.

171. The Fair Fund distribution thus creates a circular situation: the Commission penalizes a corporation to put the money into a fund to reimburse the shareholders who were themselves just indirectly penalized.

172. See, e.g., Bruce Carton, When a Dollar (of Disgorgement) Is Worth Millions, SEC. CLASS ACTION SERV., (Institutional S'holder Servs.), Dec. 3, 2004, available at http://scas.issproxy.com/Newsletter/issscasDecember2004.html#POVEditorial (discus-designed to protect shareholders, has been used as a justification for obtaining large corporate penalties, which may harm shareholders. Therein lies the paradox: Fair Funds used to compensate injured shareholders are often funded largely through corporate penalties, which are paid by the corporation's current shareholders and result in additional adverse consequences for the company through depletion of its assets.

AN ERA OF INCREASING PENALTIES AGAINST SHAREHOLDERS

The size of the penalties imposed by the Commission has increased markedly in recent years.[173] For example, in 2002, the SEC obtained its first $10 million penalty against a public corporation in its settlement with Xerox Corporation.[174] Since then, the Commission has levied many civil penalties in that amount or larger. In 2003, the Commission obtained twenty penalties in that range or greater, while in 2004, it sing recent settlements such as Symbol Technologies ($1 disgorgement; $37,000,000 civil penalty), i2 Technologies ($1 disgorgement; $10,000,000 civil penalty), Royal Dutch Petroleum ($1 disgorgement; $120,000,000 civil penalty), Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. ($1 disgorgement; $150,000,000 civil penalty), and Qwest ($1 disgorgement; $250,000,000 civil penalty)). Disgorgement is a remedy that, if available, is supposed to be exhausted before the SEC seeks a penalty. Therefore, only in the rarest of circumstances should the SEC seek a penalty that accomplishes the goal of stripping away an ill-gotten benefit. Unfortunately, that has not been the case in many SEC penalty actions. Many of those actions have blurred the distinction between "benefit" and "restitution."

173. Not only have civil monetary penalties increased, the number of officer and director bars has also increased drastically over the last several years as has the involvement of criminal authorities, such as the Department of Justice, in securities law violations. In 2004, 170 director and officer bars were entered—more than three times as many as entered in 2001—and the DOJ brought criminal proceedings against 302 entities and individuals in SEC related matters. U.S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, REPORT ON THE CURRENT ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM OF THE SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION 25 (2006), available at http://www.uschamber.com/NR/rdonlyres/eodmudjqljq2lvttjhn56rn4uubva3yoyzeijj2sh4ugkxlo6xyrpu3cqismvuckpgea3o4gpn4utyo7uzs7ueqydmc/0603SECEnforcementStudy.pdf.

174. Xerox Corp., Litigation Release No. 17465, 77 SEC Docket 971, 2002 WL 535379 (Apr. 11, 2002); see U.S. SEC. & EXCH. COMM'N, 2004 ANNUAL PERFORMANCE PLAN AND 2002 ANNUAL PERFORMANCE REPORT (2003), available at http://www.sec.gov/about/gpra2004_2002.pdf.

obtained forty such penalties.[175] The total amount of issuer penalties in 2003 and 2004 was greater than the total amount of all penalties imposed by the SEC for the prior fifteen years combined. From 2003 through 2007, approximately $13.8 billion in disgorgement and civil penalties were ordered to be paid to the SEC, courts, or other appointed trustees.[176]

An essential consideration in deciding the appropriateness of any corporate penalty is determining who has profited from the illegal conduct. Sometimes, shareholders have benefited, as in cases of price fixing or bribery of foreign officials; without the bribe, the corporation would not have received a benefit. Regulated entities, such as broker-dealers or registered investment advisors, might increase profits or revenues, which in turn benefit shareholders, by failing to comply with regulatory requirements.[177] In the rare instances where disgorgement may be difficult to calculate, corporate penalties may be appropriate to reverse the ill-gotten benefit.

On the other hand, there are situations where the shareholders did not benefit from the securities law violation. In a typical financial fraud case, management misrepresented the corporation's financial performance to the owners of the corporation. In the typical case, the shareholders have suffered from management's deception and received no ill-gotten gain. When the fraud becomes public, often the market reacts by depressing the value of the stock. In addition, an investigation and ensuing litigation distracts management from the business, drains corporate resources, and harms the corporation's reputation. A penalty would add further to shareholder injury.

In the majority of SEC corporate penalty cases, the corporation has also been sued for the same transgressions in civil class action suits seeking restitution for allegedly harmed shareholders. Settlement proceeds from such private actions should be recognized by the Commission as an offset when determining whether to penalize a corporation in a financial fraud case. Indeed, by statute, the Commission must consider such restitution in its own administrative proceedings when a penalty is under consideration.

---

175. See U.S. SEC. & EXCH. COMM'N, 2004 ANNUAL PERFORMANCE REPORT (2005), available at http://www.sec.gov/about/secpar/secpar04.pdf; U.S. SEC. & EXCH. COMM'N, ANNUAL REPORT 2003 (2004), available at http://www.sec.gov/pdf/annrep03/ar03full.pdf.

176. 2007 REPORT, supra note 9, at 26.

177. Penalty figures in this Article do not include regulated entities.

Another essential consideration in seeking and imposing a penalty is the effectiveness of the sanction. There is an inherent conflict of interest between management and shareholders of a corporation. If senior managers are faced with the threat of enforcement actions against them or their former colleagues, the senior managers might be motivated by their self-interest to settle the action against the corporation for a large corporate penalty. The penalty obtained in settlement with the corporation may satisfy the SEC's desire to garner public awareness (and thus enhance the "deterrent" effect), causing the SEC to forgo seeking large penalties against individual managers. This willingness to forgo seeking penalties against individuals increases when the evidence against the individuals is relatively weak (indicating a greater risk of losing at trial), or when the individuals have negligible assets or name recognition (diminished publicity and deterrence value).

Other potential conflicts of interest exist between management and shareholders that may interfere with the effectiveness of the sanction. New senior managers, who may have started after the departure of former employees tainted by the fraud, may feel compelled to settle the matter to minimize negative publicity from their being associated with the fraud. In addition, corporate boards, while exercising business judgment, may approve a settlement to avoid the costs and other negative effects of prolonged litigation with the SEC.

As both a philosophical and practical matter, the effectiveness of a corporate penalty as a means for deterrence is questionable. Corporations do not act; individuals do. Senior managers who commit fraud undoubtedly do so with the knowledge that their actions, if exposed, will cause reputational and economic harm to their corporation, such as a depressed stock price, loss of customers and business partners, shareholder litigation, and legal and investigative costs. Often, what motivates the wrongdoer to commit the fraud is the potential personal pecuniary gain of increased stock price, personal advancement within the corporation, or masking the negative effects of strategic or tactical management decisions on the performance of the company. If wrongdoers have little concern for their company and shareholders when they commit the fraud, it is doubtful that the behavior of potential wrongdoers will be altered by the threat of a corporate penalty on the company and shareholders that they are seeking to victimize. Are would-be fraudsters more likely to be deterred by headlines trumpeting a multimillion dollar corporate fine, or by hearing that a senior executive was fired, lost his savings, became barred from serving as an officer or a director, suffered irreparable harm to his reputation, and perhaps faces incarceration?

Each of these considerations continues to be important when the Commission evaluates whether to seek a penalty against a corporation. In providing the SEC with the power to seek penalties against corporations, Congress recognized the need for the SEC to have the authority in limited and rare circumstances, and it trusted the SEC with the discretion to use that authority in accordance with the SEC's mission of protecting investors. In order to provide some transparency to the process, the Commission has issued guidance to the public concerning what factors the Commission considers and what prospective defendants may do to avoid a penalty or reduce the amount.

THE 2006 STATEMENT OF THE SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION CONCERNING FINANCIAL PENALTIES

Under a new chairman, the Commission on January 4, 2006, released a statement concerning the factors that the SEC would evaluate in assessing a monetary penalty.[178] In formulating the penalty statement, the Commission returned to first principles: it discussed the 1989 and 1990 Commission and Congressional statements regarding penalties and attempted to set up a hierarchy of balancing considerations to guide future deliberations. It stated unequivocally that penalties against corporations can harm shareholders, a point that previously had been in dispute within the Commission.

The Commission explained that the two most significant factors are: (1) the presence or absence of a direct benefit to the corporation as a result of the violation, and (2) the degree to which the penalty will recompense or further harm shareholders.[179] The first key factor focused on unjust enrichment to the corporation, and thus to the shareholders. Any improper benefit would have to be balanced against the losses incurred by the shareholders as a result of the fraud.

The second key factor balances the possibility that the penalty will "recompense" investors with the injury that the penalty would do to them. In this factor, the Commission, unfortunately, was rather imprecise with its terms. In every case, current stockholders pay for the penalty. The purpose of this language was to cover the cases in which other classes of investors may have been harmed for the benefit of the stockholders—for example, fraudulently enhanced financial statements may have resulted in lower coupon interest rates or yields to bondholders, to the benefit of the corporation and its common stockholders.

178. Press Release, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, Statement of the Securities and Exchange Commission Concerning Financial Penalties (Jan. 4, 2006), available at http://www.sec.gov/news/press/2006-4.htm [hereinafter 2006 Penalty Statement].

179. Id.

The Commission also announced secondary factors for consideration. Those factors are: (1) "The need to deter the particular type of offense;" (2) "The extent of the injury to innocent parties;" (3) "Whether complicity in the violation is widespread throughout the corporation;" (4) "The level of intent on the part of the perpetrators;" (5) "The degree of difficulty in detecting the particular type of offense;" (6) "Presence or lack of remedial steps by the corporation;" and (7) "Extent of cooperation with Commission and other law enforcement."[180]

The penalty statement has served as a reminder of the fact that corporate penalties harm shareholders. Nevertheless, it has had some unintended consequences. In particular, the last factor—the extent of cooperation with the Commission and law enforcement—has been used along with other Commission guidance as a means to credit prospective defendants, particularly corporations, for waiving their attorney-client privilege and work-product protections.[181]

THE SEABOARD REPORT

The SEC's explicit willingness to credit cooperation, even if it involves the waiver of the attorney-client privilege and work-product protection, predates the 2006 Statement on Penalties and the Sarbanes-

180. Id.

181. The New York Stock Exchange lists waiver of the attorney-client privilege as a factor in evaluating whether a Member has exhibited "extraordinary cooperation." See New York Stock Exchange, Information Memorandum No. 05-65 to All Members, Member Organizations and Chief Operating Officers 5 (Sept. 14, 2005). Members of the New York Stock Exchange are required as a condition for listing to cooperate and produce documents upon request by the Exchange, but that required cooperation does not include a mandatory requirement to produce attorney-client privileged information. FINRA (formerly NASD) Rule 8210 requires members and persons associated with members to produce non-privileged documents and provide testimony upon request by FINRA. See FINRA Rule 8210, available at http://finra.complinet.com. As a general matter, the SEC does not impose any similar mandatory requirements to cooperate in its investigations.

Oxley Act. On October 23, 2001, the Commission released an investigative report pursuant to section 21(a) of the Exchange Act, addressing the relationship of cooperation and agency enforcement decisions.[182] That report, called the "Seaboard Report" based on the name of the defendant at issue, marked the first time that the Commission announced the factors that it would evaluate in measuring cooperation and assessing whether to bring an enforcement action.

The Commission intended this report to encourage companies to cooperate with the SEC in investigations. In that respect, the report was a major improvement in the transparency of the SEC in its enforcement investigations. Lacking a public manual of policies and procedures, the SEC in effect encouraged an informal body of knowledge to develop among long-time SEC enforcement practitioners as to what was expected of potential defendants in dealing with the Commission.[183] The Seaboard report was a long-overdue attempt to open up the process.

Among other issues, the Seaboard Report discussed disclosures to staff of confidential information protected by the attorney-client privilege or work-product doctrine. In a footnote, the Seaboard Report stated:

> The Commission recognizes that these privileges, protections and exemptions serve important social interests. In this regard, the Commission does not view a company's waiver of a privilege as an end in itself, but only as a means (where necessary) to provide relevant and sometimes critical information to the Commission staff.[184]

Waiver is not itself listed as one of the Seaboard criteria for determining whether, and how much, to credit self-policing, self-reporting, remediation, and cooperation. Nonetheless, the Enforcement Division and the Commission in the ensuing years often have misinterpreted the Seaboard Report as a basis for rewarding companies for waiving privilege. As a practical matter, rewarding companies for

---

182. Report of Investigation Pursuant to Section 21(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and Commission Statement on the Relationship of Cooperation to Agency Enforcement Decisions, Exchange Act Release No. 44,969 (Oct. 23, 2001), available at http://www.sec.gov/litigation/investreport/34-44969.htm#P54_10935.

183. The Wells Committee had the same concern with inexperienced practitioners being unaware of a prospective defendant's ability to provide written submissions that raised factual and legal defenses. See supra, text accompanying note 58.

184. Id. at n.3.

cooperating by waiving privilege has the same effect as punishing them for not waiving privilege—both effectively strip the attorney-client privilege, which is a fundamental component of our legal system.[185]

Another problem with a permissive approach to waiver is that waiver becomes mandatory in practice. Faced with concerns over their fiduciary duties and the expense and risk of litigation to the corporation, a corporation's board of directors may feel compelled to take full advantage of any cooperation credit available to it by waiving the attorney-client privilege and work-product protection. Indeed, shareholders likely would be unable to establish that the board of directors breached its fiduciary duty by waiving the corporation's privilege in exchange for cooperation credit if the corporation faced the threat of a large penalty.[186]

---

185. See, e.g., The Thompson Memorandum's Effect on the Right to Counsel in Corporate Investigations: Hearing Before the S. Comm. on the Judiciary (2006) (statement of Edwin Meese III, former Att'y Gen. of the United States and Chairman, Ctr. for Legal and Judicial Studies, Heritage Foundation), available at http://judiciary.senate.gov/testimony.cfm?id=2054&wit_id=5741.

> [E]xperience has shown that the [Thompson] Memorandum has resulted in the dilution of essential rights encompassed by the attorney-client relationship. . . . [T]he Thompson Memorandum itself pressures companies to fulfill its nine factors, including by waiving their attorney-client privilege and cutting off their employees' attorney fees. Even if no prosecutor ever mentions either factor to a company, the fact that the Thompson Memorandum requires federal prosecutors to take all nine of its factors into consideration when deciding whether to indict a business organization necessarily places great pressure on the company to take these two steps.

Id. For a discussion of the Thompson Memorandum and other Justice Department memoranda regarding waiver of attorney-client privilege and work-product protection, see infra note 187.

186. Just as with any individual, corporations must not obstruct government investigations and must comply with duly issued subpoenas and court orders. Individuals and corporations, however, owe no duty to abandon all potential defenses and privileges in the face of government investigations. In fact, under state law, the directors of a corporation owe fiduciary duties to their shareholders. See, e.g., Smith v. Van Gorkom, 488 A.2d 858 (Del. 1985) (discussing the duties of directors). Under most state laws, including Delaware General Corporate Law, the board of directors of a corporation owes to its shareholders a duty of care and loyalty. See id. In some instances, cooperating with the SEC or another regulator may be contrary to the fiduciary duties of the directors because cooperation may lead to the corporation's being susceptible to meritless governmental actions and frivolous shareholder litigation. In those circumstances, it may be appropriate for the board of directors, in fully evaluating the situation and exercising business judgment, to decline to waive their attorney-client privilege with respect to a government investigation.

The idea of crediting the waiving of the attorney-client privilege or work-product protection originated with the Department of Justice. Two years prior to the Seaboard Report, the DOJ published the first memorandum—of what would ultimately be several memoranda—illuminating on the meaning of cooperation and the general principles that the Department of Justice follows when investigating business organizations.[187] These DOJ memoranda stated explicitly that a corporation's willingness to waive the attorney-client privilege and work-product protection should be considered in determining whether a corporation has cooperated adequately with the government. Given the number of parallel investigations by the DOJ and SEC, the policies of one agency affect the conduct of the other's investigations and limit the possible range of choices available to a defendant.[188]

---

187. The first memorandum was sent by Deputy Attorney General Eric Holder to all Department Component Heads and U.S. Attorneys on June 16, 1999 (the "Holder Memorandum"). The Holder Memorandum focused on the prosecution of corporate criminal activity and included a document called "Federal Prosecution of Corporations," which outlined factors and considerations to be taken into account when charging corporations. Memorandum from Eric Holder, Deputy Att'y Gen., to Heads of Department Components and United States Attorneys (June 16, 1999) (on file with the Department of Justice). The second memorandum, which was a response to the substantial controversy that arose over the Holder Memorandum, was sent by Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson in January 2003 and included much of the same text from the Holder memo, with some changes to reflect findings of the Corporate Fraud Task Force. Memorandum from Larry D. Thompson, Deputy Att'y Gen., to Heads of Department Components and United States Attorneys (Jan. 20, 2003), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/dag/cftf/corporate_guidelines.htm. Mounting criticism regarding lack of policies and procedures in this regard led acting Deputy Attorney General Robert McCallum in 2005 to amend the U.S. Attorney's manual to require that U.S. Attorneys establish a written waiver review process for their respective districts. See Memorandum from Robert D. McCallum, Jr., Acting Deputy Att'y Gen., to Heads of Department Components and United States Attorneys (Oct. 21, 2005), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/usao/eousa/foia_reading_room/usam/title9/crm00163.htm.
Finally, the Justice Department, under the direction of Deputy Attorney General Paul J. McNulty, released a memorandum that attempted to draw distinctions on categories of privileged material. See Memorandum from Paul J. McNulty, Deputy Attorney General, to Heads of Department Components and United States Attorneys (Dec. 12, 2006), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/dag/speeches/2006/mcnulty_memo.pdf. The McNulty memorandum still gives entities credit for turning over attorney-client privileged material and attorney work product.

188. The implications extend to individuals as well. DOJ allows prosecutors to consider a company's willingness to punish employees who assert their constitutional rights and whether the company entered into joint-defense or information-sharing agreements with employees. This policy could cause an employee to face the difficult choice of losing his job or cooperating in an internal investigation without counsel and without constitutional protections. See, e.g., Proposed Amendment of Commentary on

The practices of the SEC and DOJ to credit cooperation for waiving the attorney-client privilege or work-product protection have met with significant criticism. On February 5, 2007, the American Bar Association ("ABA") submitted to the SEC a proposed "Revised Commission Statement on the Relationship of Cooperation to Agency Enforcement Decisions," which seeks to have the SEC revise the Seaboard Report with respect to the waiver of the attorney-client privilege and work-product protection.[189] The proposal amends the section of the Seaboard Report describing the factors by which cooperation may be measured to read: "provided, however, that a company shall not be required to take any of the foregoing actions to the extent that it would result in a waiver of the attorney-client privilege or work product doctrine."[190] The proposal also seeks to remove the ambiguous footnote 3 of the Seaboard Report that describes waiver as "a means (where necessary) to provide relevant and sometimes critical information to the Commission staff." The proposal adds a new paragraph and related footnote describing the importance of attorney-client privilege and work-product protection and the adverse consequences when staff seeks the waiver.[191] The new paragraph states in part:

> Commission staff shall not take any action or assert any position that directly or indirectly demands, requests or encourages a company or its attorneys to waive its attorney-client privilege or the protections of the work product doctrine. Also, in assessing a company's cooperation, Commission staff shall not draw any inference from the company's preservation of its attorney-client privilege and the protections of the work product doctrine. At the same time, the voluntary decision by a company to waive the attorney-client

---

Section 8c2.5 of the Federal Sentencing Guidelines Regarding Waiver of Attorney-Client Privilege and Work Product Doctrine Before the United States Sentencing Commission (2006) (statement of Kent Wicker, Nat'l Ass'n of Criminal Def. Lawyers).

> This compelled waiver of the attorney-client privilege forced my client to give up the protection at the heart of our criminal justice system: The privilege under the Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination. It is not enough to say he could have just given up his job and retained his Fifth Amendment rights. This is a real person, with a real family to support.

Id.

189. Letter from Karen J. Mathis, President, American Bar Ass'n, to Christopher Cox, Chairman, U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n (Feb. 5, 2007), available at http://www.abanet.org/poladv/letters/attyclient/2007feb05_privwaivsec_l.pdf.

190. Id. at 2.

191. Id. at 2-3.

> privilege and/or the work product doctrine shall not be considered when assessing whether the company provided effective cooperation. The Commission may consider, however, in assessing whether a company has provided effective cooperation, the degree to which the company has provided factual information to the Commission staff in a manner, to be worked out by the company and the Commission staff, that preserves the protections of the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine to the extent possible.[192]

Similar criticisms by other groups have been, and continue to be, levied against using the Seaboard Report to encourage waiver of the attorney-client privilege or work-product protection.[193]

As the SEC and other Federal agencies press to have the attorney-client privilege waived as they undertake investigations, the entire privilege is gradually weakened. As knowledge of its weakening spreads, corporate employees may become less candid and forthcoming, corporate internal investigations will be less trustworthy, and shareholders and government investigators will be frustrated in their efforts to prevent misdeeds. Given those outcomes, revisiting Seaboard and the SEC's approach to the attorney-client privilege and work-product protection is long overdue.

A CALL FOR A NEW ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The SEC Enforcement Division is viewed with pride by Commissioners, staff, alumni, and many outsiders. The Division has a long history of stellar achievements and dedicated attorneys, accountants, and other staff. Thirty-six years after its creation, the Division is larger, stronger, and more visible than any member of the Wells Committee could have imagined. Thus, it makes sense that the

---

192. Id. at 3. The proposal recognizes that there are limited, specific exceptions where the staff, after obtaining advance approval from the Director of Enforcement or his/her designee, may seek privileged or work-product materials. Those exceptions arise when the company asserts the advice of counsel defense or the SEC staff establishes the elements for the crime/fraud exception. Id.

193. See, e.g., McLucas, Shapiro & Song, The Decline of the Attorney-Client Privilege in the Corporate Setting, 96 J. CRIM. L. & CRIMINOLOGY 621 (2006); Posting of Thomas O. Gorman, The Rolling Stones Test: SEC And DOJ Cooperation Standards, SEC Actions Blog, http://www.secactions.com/?p=190 (May 22, 2007, 01:07 EST) ("Conversely no cooperation credit should be given for what the government says it does not usually need –privileged material and waivers.").

Commission should consider whether it is time to convene a Wells-like committee to "bring to date" the best thinking on enforcement practices.

The new advisory committee's mission would be to conduct an independent review of the Commission's enforcement program from multiple, diverse perspectives, and to recommend to the Commission, if warranted, any needed changes. We propose that the new advisory committee adopt the same mandate as that of the Wells Committee in 1972. The tasks assigned to the Wells Committee are as important today as they were in 1972. If the same mandate is adopted, the new advisory committee would be charged with virtually the same tasks as the original Wells Committee, only slightly adapted to developments in the last three decades:

> (1) reviewing and evaluating the Commission's enforcement policies and practices in light of its statutory responsibilities and mission to protect investors; to maintain fair, orderly, and efficient markets; and to facilitate capital formation;
> (2) advising how the SEC's enforcement objectives and strategies may be made more effective;
> (3) examining the Commission's enforcement practices and procedures from the point of view of due process,[194] respect for the prospective defendants' attorney-client privilege and work-product protection,[195] the relationship of enforcement action to notice of legal requirements, the attribution of responsibility for violations, and the

194. The Committee should consider the Commission's current procedure regarding authorization of cases implicating potential corporate penalties, under which the Commission authorizes the staff to negotiate a settlement, before the staff engages in any settlement discussions with the prospective defendant. At issue is whether the Commission, at the time of authorization of negotiations, should also authorize the staff to litigate if the settlement negotiations prove unfruitful, or whether the staff should return to the Commission to seek litigation authorization. The issues hearken back to those that animated the debate around the original Wells Committee Recommendation 20, namely whether authorizing staff to litigate before commencing settlement negotiations skews the negotiations through the implicit threat to litigate if no settlement is reached. See supra notes 61-72 and accompanying text.

195. Included in this task would be the need to re-evaluate the 2006 Statement Regarding Penalties and the 2001 Seaboard Report, particularly with respect to the expectation of waiver of attorney-client privilege and work-product protection as a determinant of cooperation.

> protection of reputation and rights of privacy of those with whom the Commission interacts;[196]
> (4) making recommendations on the appropriate blend of regulation, publicity, and formal enforcement action and on methods of furthering voluntary compliance with securities laws;
> (5) making recommendations on criteria for the selection and disposition of enforcement actions, in particular, providing timely notice to parties of the closing of an investigation; and
> (6) advising on the appropriate uses of penalties against corporations in light of the SEC's mission of protecting investors.

Among the many issues that would fall under this broad mandate would be the implementation of mechanisms to provide more efficacy, predictability and transparency to the enforcement program. The overall philosophy and management of the enforcement program should be examined to determine how best it can fulfill the SEC's mission, in light of resources and statutory authority.

Predictability and transparency provide for a fair process that respects the rights of all parties involved and ensures adherence to the rule of law.[197] Of course, the Commission's discretion should not be eliminated in favor of rote application of a mathematical formula for calculating penalties. Discretion plays an important role in forgoing certain theories of liability or not bringing an action at all. For example, a company and its shareholders may have been punished enough through

---

196. Beyond the scope of this Article is the ancillary issue of disclosure by issuers of the various stages of an SEC investigation. Although in large part a facts-and-circumstances determination as to materiality, guidance would be helpful to issuers and practitioners.

197. With the increasing emphasis on a more punitive enforcement approach, are sufficient safeguards in place to protect the rights of prospective individual defendants? At the time of the Wells Committee, the SEC lacked the power to seek punitive damages against individuals, so the potential costs to the individual defendant were not as pronounced as they are today. Individual defendants are faced with high costs of defending an SEC action and severe consequences if they lose. These consequences at times can be tantamount to criminal sanctions, including large monetary payments and loss of livelihood. Often, the only option is a pro-se defense. Will a Commission one day decide that it should establish a system to provide representation to individual defendants who cannot afford to hire private counsel?

other avenues or the securities law violation may have been merely an honest mistake. Indeed, the Wells Committee's Recommendation 14 discussed this type of discretion:

> The Commission should give due consideration in cases which appear to involve honest mistake or good faith efforts at compliance to exercising its discretion against bringing a formal enforcement proceeding notwithstanding the appearance of a violation.[198]

The ability of the Enforcement Division to recommend to the Commission that no action be taken in a particular matter should be encouraged and institutionalized. This will require, among other things, a re-evaluation of the incentives for bringing actions and obtaining large penalties (such as through promotions, awards, and public recognition). Statistics, such as the number of cases brought and the penalties recovered, should play only a minimal role in assessing individual performance. Instead, an evaluation system should focus on rewarding high quality efforts and professionalism regardless of the outcome of particular actions. A decision to forgo bringing an enforcement action should not be treated automatically as a loss, but it should be evaluated qualitatively alongside other enforcement decisions.

In some instances, exercising discretion may not be appropriate. There should not be institutional encouragement for using discretion to formulate theories of liability that overstep the boundaries of existing law. Law making is reserved for legislative process in Congress and the SEC rulemaking process under the strict requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act; it is not a function of the Enforcement Division.

Another aspect that could be considered by the advisory committee is the implementation of a written and uniform "full-disclosure" policy for enforcement matters.[199] In criminal procedure, this is often referred to as an "open jacket" policy. Operating under such a policy, the enforcement staff would show defense counsel the evidence it has against the prospective defendant, which is the essence of due process. Some practicing lawyers have criticized the SEC Enforcement Division for failing to explain to defendants the allegations of wrongdoing and failing to share critical incriminating—and most importantly,

---

198. WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT, supra note 39, at iv.

199. The Wells Committee proposed the institutionalization of a similar policy. See supra note 71 and accompanying text. Currently, there is not a uniform practice among the various units in the Enforcement Division.

exculpatory—evidence that the SEC has gathered.[200] Because no such policy is in place today, arguments in Wells Submissions often are based on defense counsel's best guess as to the conduct that enforcement staff has identified as violating federal securities laws. The sharing of information would promote the goal of fact-finding, which is paramount to due process and to the administration of justice.

With the advent of additional remedies in the SEC's arsenal in the decades after the Wells Committee and a shift in approach towards a more punitive focus, the idea of a full-disclosure policy is even more important than it was when the Wells Committee made its recommendations. The SEC staff should inform fully individuals and companies about the allegations and the evidence at the time of a Wells call or, at the very latest, before entering into settlement discussions. Corporate boards, in particular, must be sufficiently informed so that they can apprise their shareholders and exercise good business judgment in determining whether to settle a matter with the SEC.

Another aspect of the enforcement program that the new advisory committee should consider is the process for closing investigations. In a report to Congress by the General Accountability Office ("GAO"), the GAO harshly criticized the Enforcement Division for not closing investigations promptly and observed that the Division had a "potentially large backlog of investigations that are not likely to result in enforcement actions and for which closing packages have not been completed."[201] As a result, the GAO concluded that "the subjects of many aged and inactive investigations may continue to suffer adverse consequences until closing actions are completed."[202]

Enforcement Division officials told the GAO that their attorneys may believe that pursuing potential securities violations is a higher

---

200. See, e.g., Kevin J. Harnishch & Natasha Colton, When the SEC Comes Knocking, 15 A.B.A. SEC. BUS. L. 1 (2005), available at http://www.abanet.org/buslaw/blt/2005-09-10/colton.shtml.

201. U.S. GOV'T ACCOUNTABILITY OFFICE, GAO-07-830, SEC: ADDITIONAL ACTIONS NEEDED TO ENSURE PLANNED IMPROVEMENTS ADDRESS LIMITATIONS IN ENFORCEMENT DIVISION OPERATIONS 22 (2007), available at http://www.gao.gov/new.items/d07830.pdf. For example, according to the GAO Report, one SEC regional office reported that as of March 2007 about 35% of its open investigations were "more than 2 years old, had not resulted in an enforcement action, and were no longer being actively pursued." Id. at 21. In response, the Enforcement Division has undertaken to review the backlog and streamline the closing process. Id. at 46.

202. Id.

priority than closing investigations.[203] Officials also cited a scarcity of time, administrative support, and incentives to comply with established procedures for closing investigations.[204] Although the GAO recognized that resolving the potentially large backlog of investigations would impose resource challenges for Enforcement Division,[205] the GAO recommended that the SEC chairman direct the Enforcement Division to "consider developing expedited procedures for closing investigations."[206]

When the Commission or its staff determines that an investigation should be closed or action is not warranted, the agency promptly should send a closing letter.[207] Closing letters should be sent not only to those who have made a Wells Submission, but also to any significant non-party that has provided documents, information, or testimony to the SEC. Similarly, if the enforcement staff views a person only as a witness or source of information in an investigation, staff should make that clear to the person.

In its proposed mandate to examine enforcement practices and procedures from the point of view of due process, the new advisory committee should consider ways to improve the cherished Wells process. One way in which the Wells process should be bolstered is through a mechanism to allow a proposed defendant to appear before the Commission to oppose a proposed enforcement proceeding. Although it would likely be both unnecessary and unmanageable to allow such an "oral Wells submission" in every situation, it may be beneficial to both the Commission and proposed defendants for the Commission to have a discretionary avenue to hear from proposed defendants prior to taking action. Matters that might be appropriate for this procedure would include complex factual cases, such as those necessitating expert witnesses, disputes concerning the level of cooperation, or cases in which character assessment and credibility is particularly important.[208]

---

203. Id.

204. Id.

205. Id.

206. Id. at 7.

207. The Wells Committee in Recommendation 8 proposed that the "Commission adopt in the usual case the practice of notifying an investigatee against whom no further action is contemplated that the staff has concluded its investigation . . . ." and will not recommend an enforcement action. WELLS COMMITTEE ADVISORY REPORT, supra note 39, at 20.

208. For example, at both the Federal Trade Commission and the Federal Communications Commission, in-person presentations to commissioners and staff of

A review of the enforcement process would not be complete without a review of the costs to parties responding to an investigation. Responding to an SEC investigation is costly, particularly in the age of e-mails and electronic data. The SEC must ensure that its investigations and enforcement actions do not impose unnecessary costs. Overly broad subpoenas or document or interview requests add to a responding entity's costs, and not every responding entity becomes a defendant. Innocent parties pay the price of overly broad requests. Notices to preserve—and subsequent requests to produce—electronic data, including e-mails, voicemails, and server back-up tapes are particularly burdensome and costly to a company. While it is undoubtedly critical for the SEC to have certain electronic data to conduct an investigation and litigate a matter, preservation notices and requests for production are often generic and extend well beyond the boundaries of the existing investigation. It is difficult to justify imposing unnecessary costs on a company, particularly when the investigation may last many years and result in no action taken.

The new advisory committee should recommend ways to minimize costs through the formulation of detailed procedures to address preservation notices and production requests for electronic data. In recommending the procedures, the advisory committee should take into account the burden and expense of preserving certain kinds of records, such as electronic voicemail, and producing data stored in long-term media such as back-up tapes. Preservation notices should be reasonably related to the matters under investigation, and prospective preservation of information should be invoked only if misconduct is suspected or ongoing.[209] The use of generic preservation notices, covering data that the company might not otherwise preserve in the normal course of its operations, should be prohibited.

Production requests should be narrowly tailored and should first seek information that is readily accessible. Requests should not demand the production of data stored on back-up tapes unless unavailable through other sources. As a measure to guard against overbroad requests, the advisory committee should consider ways to incorporate in enforcement procedures pre-approval of document requests by a senior member of the Enforcement Division.

---

evidence and advocacy positions in advance of potential enforcement actions are routine.

209. Subjects of investigation already have other legal obligations to preserve documents. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 1512 (2006).

The advisory committee also should explore the establishment of an ombudsman to review and evaluate complaints about the enforcement process and behavior of the Enforcement staff. An ombudsman would provide an avenue for persons to convey their grievances to the Commission without fear of reprisal. People should be able to make these complaints anonymously through a hotline.[210]

The new advisory committee should examine the usage, effects, amount, and appropriateness of issuer penalties in financial fraud cases. The committee should consider whether these issuer penalties are consistent with the SEC's mission of investor protection; maintaining fair, orderly, and efficient markets; and facilitating capital formation. For example, do penalties protect investors? Do they harm or benefit shareholders? Is the circularity of Fair Fund penalty distributions consistent with ensuring fair, orderly, and efficient capital markets? Is capital formation impeded by the threat of large, unpredictable issuer penalties?

The advisory committee also should evaluate the moral hazards associated with issuer penalties. One moral hazard is the possibility that managers of companies might agree to a large corporate penalty in order to avoid or soften actions against culpable individuals.[211] Are individuals deterred from wrongdoing if they expect that shareholders will pay the penalties for the misconduct?

The SEC also faces it own moral hazards when contemplating the assessment of issuer penalties. Does the prospect of large issuer penalties and the inevitable press coverage cause the SEC to misallocate

---

210. The SEC's Office of Compliance Inspections and Examinations already has such a hotline. See U.S. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, Office of Compliance Inspections & Examinations, Examination Hotline, http://www.sec.gov/about/offices/ocie/ocie_hotline.shtml (last visited May 9, 2008).

211. See generally Donald C. Langevoort, On Leaving Corporate Executives "Naked, Homeless and Without Wheels": Corporate Fraud, Equitable Remedies, and the Debate over Entity versus Individual Liability, 42 WAKE FOREST L. REV. 627 (2007). As Professor Langevoort explains:

> The corporate sanction avoids the need to attribute fault to any particular individual under circumstances where there is likely mutual finger pointing about who is to blame. For all these reasons, company sanctions are the path of least resistance; the SEC can claim its victory and move its resources to new matters that deserve attention. There is probably a publicity-related reason as well: sanctions against companies can be large enough to grab headlines, which is less likely to occur with respect to individual sanctions, even in the aggregate.

Id. at 654.

resources to build these cases to the detriment of other types of enforcement actions?

The Commission's 2006 penalty statement was a significant first step in setting forth a principled foundation for examination of many of these concerns.[212] In applying the penalty statement, the Commission has encountered areas not addressed by the statement, such as the determination of the amount of penalty and the appropriateness of imposing penalties on new shareholders.[213] Taking the Commission's experience into consideration, the new advisory committee should re-examine these issues with the input of economists, legal scholars, and practitioners.

These and any additional recommendations from the advisory committee that ultimately are approved by the Commission should be set forth in a publicly available Enforcement Manual. In 2007, the minority members of the Senate Finance Committee recommended that the SEC create such a manual, which would be similar to the U.S. Attorney Manual, "to address situations or issues likely to recur."[214] The public accessibility of the manual would ensure transparency and uniform application. The manual itself, and any later changes to it, should be reviewed and approved by the Commission. Deviations from the manual, while necessary in some instances, should be discouraged. The manual will serve as the governing guidelines for the Enforcement staff at headquarters and in the regional offices. An Enforcement Manual that reflects the recommendations of an advisory committee, as adopted by the Commission, could serve as a useful framework for the Commission's enforcement program in the years to come.

CONCLUSION

The SEC's enforcement program serves a critical function in ensuring proper compliance with the U.S. securities laws. Throughout

---

212. See 2006 Penalty Statement, supra note 178.

213. Many of these same concerns were raised by the Commission during the legislative debate over the Remedies Act of 1990. See, e.g., SEC Memorandum in Support of Remedies Act, supra note 96.

214. See Staff of S. Fin. Comm., 110th Cong., Report on the Firing of an SEC Attorney and the Investigation of Pequot Capital Management 7 (Comm. Print 2007), available at http://finance.senate.gov/sitepages/leg/LEG%202007/Leg%20110%20080307%20SEC.pdf.

its history, the SEC has protected investors and the general public from a wide array of fraudulent conduct. Given the importance of enforcement to the SEC's mission, a critical review of the enforcement program—similar to that done by the Wells Committee in 1972—is long overdue. This article is intended to start a list of items for consideration, but does not purport to identify all the areas that should be evaluated by a new Wells-like advisory committee. The members of the advisory committee undoubtedly will draw from their own experiences and expertise to develop a full agenda. The Commission should be receptive to considering any new ideas for improving the enforcement program and furthering the SEC's mission. We are confident that the result will be an enforcement program that is more transparent, better embodies principles of due process, and more effectively combats violations of the federal securities laws.